Shakespeare Field Course Opens Friday

Ashland—Registration for the Stanford university field course in Shakespeare, taught by Dr. Margery Bailey, will be held between 2 p.m. and 5 p.m. Thursday, in Trinity house opposite the post office in Ashland.

The Stanford course was inaugurated in Ashland last year, in conjunction with the Shakespeare festival, by Dr. Bailey, professor of English at Stanford and festival director of education.

The class is open to anyone above the age of 16; graduate and undergraduate college students may apply course credits toward a degree. The course is also open to auditors.

The classes begin Friday and end August 5. Included will be lectures by Dr. Bailey on the plays of the current season, and on Tudor life. In addition, special lectures and demonstrations will be staged by members of the festival staff, and rehearsals and auditions in the festival theatre will be attended.

The class will use the growing collection of Shakespearean materials in the Ashland public library collection, as well as "Ashland Studies in Shakespeare," a book designed and edited by Dr. Bailey for class use.

Information on the class may be had by calling Ashland 9-5111.

Washington's Birthday Is Remembered by Operator

Rochester, N. Y. (U.P.)—Charles E. Dean has more reason to remember George Washington's birthday than most people.

On Feb. 22, 1951, the 72-year-old elevator operator was struck and injured by a left-turning automobile at a downtown intersection.

Four years later, on the same date and at the same hour Dean was hit by a left-turning car at the same spot. Both times he was on his way to dinner, but the second time he suffered more severe injuries and had to be hospitalized for a time.

Remember Youth And Understand

Brookings, S. D. (U.P.)—An expert suggests that parents can better understand the actions of their children by recalling the memories of their own childhood.

Mrs. Merle Gunsalus, a family life specialist of the South Dakota state college extension service, said that parents have within their own resources and personal experiences many of the facts and understandings needed to help their youngsters.

"Remembering how we felt and reacted to things in our own childhood and youth," Mrs. Gunsalus said, "gives us understanding for the how and why of the actions of our children."

"An honest attempt to see things on the child's level will very often give us the different slant we need because we have been giving consideration only from the adult viewpoint."

Mrs. Gunsalus said that all parents are confronted with more-or-less the same problems over a period even though they will vary in severity and form. "This is true," she said, "because children are alike in many ways although they are separate personalities, each with strong individual differences and varying needs."

However, she cautioned parents to remember that solutions to problems might work one time and not work another time.
