$4.28 Worth of Food Found Suitable for Two for Week

Washington—(U.P.)—The Agriculture Department said today that a young couple can get along fine on $4.28 worth of food per person per week.

This average food budget figure, which works out at about 20 cents a meal, was supplied by nutritional experts at the Utah Experiment Station.

The experts conducted a three-week diet research project with a young college couple performing the eating roles voluntarily in the interest of science. The couple finished the project in good health and with no loss of weight.

The $4.28 was parcelled out this way:

Milk and cheese, 83 cents; eggs, 22 cents; potatoes, four cents; leafy green and yellow vegetables, 33 cents; citrus fruits and tomatoes, 16 cents; other fruit and vegetables, 55 cents; meat, fish, and poultry, 66 cents; dry beans, peas, and nuts, 22 cents; baked goods, flour, and cereals, 61 cents; fats and oils, 36 cents; sugar, syrup, preserves, 25 cents; condiments and spices, five cents.

During the three weeks the couple bought nine quarts of homogenized milk and enough dry milk solids to make 21 quarts of skim milk. The 15 per cent of the food dollar that went for meat and fish bought 2½ pounds of ground beef, eight ounces of frankfurters, 12 ounces of yellowtail (fish), two pounds of frozen fish, three pounds of chuck roast, and 11 ounces of liver.

The nutritionists said that from an ideal standpoint the diet was short in green and leafy vegetables and in meat, fish, and poultry. But the whole milk, butter, margarine, and yellow fruits consumed by the couple made up the vitamin A that a larger amount of greens would have provided. And by using milk, cheese, peanut butter, eggs, and beans, in addition to meat and fish, they got enough protein.

The nutritionists said the couple maintained their normal weights of 175 pounds for the man and 120 pounds for the woman and were in good health at the conclusion of the experiment.

Shoemaker Answers $16,000 Question on Television Quiz Show

New York—(U.P.)—Gino Prato, the little shoemaker from the Bronx who nailed down $16,000 on CBS-TV's $64,000 question, found himself besieged today by autograph hounds, well-wishers and a sandpaper throat.

Shaky but smiling after wading through a four-part question in his category, opera, the Italian-born Prato confessed that he had reached celebrity status in his neighborhood.

Autograph Sought

"People are calling me I never heard from before. Customers are asking me to autograph the soles of their shoes," he said in a hoarse voice. "But I'm so nervous I'm smoking more than two packs of cigarettes a day."

The 55-year-old Prato refused to say whether he would go on and try for $32,000 next week.

"I prayed all last week," he whispered. "I spent an hour and a half in St. Patrick's Cathedral praying the day of the show. And I'll be back in the cathedral again next Tuesday."

In direct contrast to the nervous little cobbler was another opera lover, Bayard MacMichael, who ran his string to $8,000, MacMichael, who grew up in New York as a sales representative for a brush company, took his win almost casually. He left immediately after the show for a business meeting at his firm's headquarters in Wooster, O.

MacMichael correctly answered a question dealing with three operas Giuseppe Verdi had written on plays of Shakespeare. They were "Falstaff," "Othello" and "MacBeth."

Prato's four-pronged query dealt with an unfinished Puccini opera. He named it ("Turn-of-the-century"), the man who finished it (Franco Alfano), the year of its premiere (1926) and the place of its premiere (La Scala Opera House in Milan, Italy.)

There was at least one indication, however, that Prato might throw in the sponge. Backstage after the show, Wendy Barrie, who does the commercials on the show, advised Prato: "Take the $16,000 and go. You can't drive to Italy in a Cadillac." The reference was to the consolation prize that Prato will receive if he muffs his next question.

Prato nodded solemnly and said in his gravel voice: "I know. I've been thinking hard about it."

Abbott, Costello Plan Independent Production

Hollywood — (U.P.) — Comedians Bud Abbott and Lou Costello planned to engage in independent film production today after ending 15 years of working for Universal-International studio.

The comedy team ended their association with U-I Tuesday. Their 40 films earned them an estimated $25,000,000.

Dead line for Sunday Classified is at noon Saturday.
