

Car Trips Take Careful Thought, Motor Club Says

Chicago—(U.P.)—If you're planning a trip by car, either this vacation season or the next, it's best to figure out the number of days and dollars you can afford, the Chicago Motor Club advises.

For two passengers, says the club, $30 a day should be allowed, provided that you're not traveling more than 300 miles a day. Here's the breakdown on a daily basis for two:

Car operating costs—$9. This amount is computed at 2½ cents per mile for gas and oil. The extra $1.50 goes for maintenance expense.

Meals—$8. The cost is figured at 75 cents for breakfast, $1.25 for lunch, and at least $2 for dinner.

Lodging—$8. Rates at hotels and motor courts appear to be about the same though a traveling family will save a garage charge and tips at a motel. Overnight accommodations for two range from $4 to $10, depending on the type and locality.

Stretch the Dollar

Admissions, amusements, and tolls—$2. This covers admission for such places as shrines and other attractions.

Incidentals, souvenirs and emergencies—$3. This includes roadside refreshments, postcards, films, toothpaste, etc.

If you take along two children, say teen-agers, the food bill will be doubled, the club says. Lodging cost will jump about one-half and other charges will be increased. The total bill will be about $46 daily for a family of four.

To stretch your travel dollar, the motor club suggests:

1. Drive during the early part of the day so you can spend plenty of time to find the type of accommodation you want at a price you can afford.
2. Avoid "tourist traps." Visit travel attractions that are worthwhile.
3. Plan your vacation, if possible, for the spring and autumn, thereby avoiding peak travel seasons.

Chicago—(U.P.)—Some 18,000,000 American drivers do not pay cash when they stop at service stations across the nation.

Instead, they use credit cards which provide convenient service for the buyer and more than billion dollars worth of business annually for station owners.

The credit card idea, which began in the 1920's when leading oil companies say, but as charge purchasers, has advanced rapidly in the past five years, growing into an expensive, but yet productive, part of the oil and auto products industry.

Exchange Agreements

Under the system, issuing companies guarantee payment to lessees of filling stations handling the firm's products. To use the cards, operators must require that purchases not be taken away without being put into or attached to the car, and the card not have expired. Lessees must submit invoices signed by purchasers.

The cost of processing applications for credit cards, which involves establishing credit ratings, runs into a large expenditure, oil companies say, but, as one marketer put it, "if we gave up issuing credit cards, our retail business would drop to almost nothing."

Cards may be used not only for buying gasoline and oil, but for many other products on sale at stations. One firm allows credit on up to 200 pounds of fertilizer to motorists with yards to keep up.

The cards are good at all stations leased from large oil companies by means of exchange agreements.

Chicago—(U.P.)—A new room for old cars was opened recently at Chicago's Museum of Science and Industry.

Entitled "Cars of Yesteryear," the exhibit presents a selection of antique cars chosen for their representation of the technical development of the automobile.

Each of the 14 cars in the collection is typical of its particular period and represents the mechanical genius of its day. All have been renovated and could be driven under their own power.

Familiar appliances and objects contemporary with the automobile of each period also are displayed to give visitors a better "time sense." These include a Regina music box, an Edison phonograph and a late 19th century wall telephone.

The oldest car in the collection is a three-wheeled Bernardi (1893-94) donated by the Italian government. It has a one-cylinder motor, platinum hot plate ignition and water cooling. Its top speed was 22 miles per hour.
