HOW'S YOUR BOOSTER PUMP WORKING?

It is beyond my comprehension what makes an automobile run at the touch of a button or the flick of a switch, and so when I see a 14-year-old boy take a fine automobile apart, strew the pieces around the floor, monkey with various parts for a day or two and then put 'em all together again, making the car run better than before, I'm flabbergasted.

Speaking of pumps, I learned that there's one in an automobile when the thing froze one lovely autumn night in Flagstaff, and when we started the car in the morning some parts or something were sheared off. Had to stop every few miles all day to let the engine cool or refill the radiator.

A fellow who purport to know—I hope he wasn't spoofing—told me that the answer to a question that has always baffled me and still does, namely, how either the water supply or the sewage of a large city can be carried to and from the highest and the lowest levels, with such efficiency—the answer, said the man, is simple: Whenever it is necessary booster pumps keep water or sewage moving. It just doesn't seem quite plausible.

But the booster pump you can use to improve your circulation, if you are not as dumb about automobiles, waterworks and the like, is the aspiratory action of the thorax. This is so plausible that even—

Actually those who sell you poor geeks "shots" and basal metabolism tests would be discomfited if you caught 'em in the open and asked 'em to explain the aspiratory action of the thorax.

When it comes to that, I must admit it is not easy to explain, even for an old hand, but if you know enough physics to understand why water runs uphill (in a siphon) or why fluid (air, gas, water, blood) tends to flow from higher pressure to lower pressure, you can understand it.

When the diaphragm contracts (tarpaulin squeezes down upon the abdomen) it increases pressure in the abdomen at the same time it decreases pressure in the thorax. So when air is drawn into the thorax (lungs) blood in the great vein (vena cava) and the vast network of small veins (splanchic pool) is pumped toward the heart (right auricle). When the diaphragm relaxes (rests) and air leaves the thorax (lungs) in expiration the booster effect on circulation is not lost from backflow of blood in the great veins, because the veins are equipped with valves which prevent backflow.

That's the aspiratory action of the thorax, and the reason why everybody should practice regularly night and morning, not "deep breathing" but the Belly Breathing exercise, as it is described in the pamphlet Belly Breathing, available on request if you ask for it in writing (clipping will not suffice) and provide a stamped envelope bearing your address. I don't mind if you call me stinker, quack or so-and-so, but you can't patronize or snub me and still command my service.

Persons with poor circulation or any kind of heart, artery or blood pressure trouble can get great benefit from the booster pump if they know how to make it work efficiently. I suggest that they study Little Lesson 21, the booklet How to Breathe, for which send 25c and stamped, self-addressed envelope.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS
Pleased with your pamphlet on Excessive Perspiration. It has done wonders for me. (H. M. C.)
Answer—I have no such pamphlet. On signed, written request, however, I'll send the pamphlet on EXCESSIVE SWEATING, if the request is accompanied with a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Advice to a Friend
A friend has a growth coming in your advice. Doctor. (Atlanta).
Answer—That she consult a physician.

Sick Headache
I had "sick headaches" from the time I was about 11 years old. I'm 39 now, and no Jack Benny nonsense!

Two years ago I began supplementing my diet as you suggested with six calcium daily. It's been nearly a year now since I've had a bad headache. Thank you. (S. M.)
Answer—Thank you. Persons subject to periodic sick headache (migraine), nervous or neuralgic or any other kind of headache, may learn something to their advantage from the pamphlet WHY HAVE HEAD-ACHES? Do not use a clipping if you expect a reply. Ask for the pamphlet in writing, sign your request, and enclose a stamped envelope bearing your address.

Good for the Belly
We do enjoy your articles so much and are glad when you often they are omitted. They give us many belly laughs at our house. (Mrs. S. J. E.)
Answer—Thank you, Ma'am. I never fail to submit copy daily or Sunday.
