

Seventy Attend Book Club Party

Contemporary Book club members held the annual party for husbands and guests last Saturday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Farrell, 1510 East Main street. About 70 attended.

Tables for dinner were set in the garden, and the party was in a Greenwich village theme. Each man attending brought a painting, preferably one which he had painted himself. These were hung on a clothesline and women guests each selected one, and by this method chose their dinner partners.

Mrs. Raymond Miksche was chairman in charge of decorations.

TV AND HAM

New York — (U.P.) — For an easy-to-prepare snack for television watching, try this combination. Combine cream cheese with a family-size can of deviled ham and form into balls around chunks of canned pineapple. Roll in chopped nuts if desired.

Don't use a wet cloth when wiping a hot range; you may crack the stove's enamel.

Travelers Should Act Like Guests, Says Mayor's Wife

By GAY PAULEY
United Press Correspondent

New York — (U.P.) — Mrs. Robert F. Wagner, "first lady" of the nation's largest city, says Americans would make more friends abroad if they acted as "guests" in a country instead of well-heeled tourists.

Mrs. Wagner, friendly and charming wife of New York's mayor, accompanied her husband on a month-long official tour of six Western European nations and Israel.

Now back, with feet still sore from climbing the Acropolis in high heels, Susan Wagner sat on the wide veranda of Gracie Mansion, official residence of the city's mayors, and talked like any other tourist of the sights she saw, the persons she met in this exclusive United Press interview.

"My first trip abroad," said the attractive, blonde mother of two boys, "Imagine that... just about everyone I know has been over several times."

Everywhere she went she crossed paths with Americans—a record number is abroad this summer—and says she was disappointed in the way they seek each other out.

"I think we should all make a sincere effort to know the people of the country we visit," she said.

Traveling Light
She noticed so many American tourists preferring hotels catering to visitors from the United States, dining at restaurants featuring steak and French fries and going places where they were sure to find other tourists from back home.

"We should accept their customs while we're there," she said. "Seems to me, we should be as guests in their house."

Mrs. Wagner said that the next time she goes abroad she will "prep" for the trip by studying at least one foreign language.

"There still is the language barrier, even if English is spoken almost anywhere you go," she added.

She traveled with three suitcases and one hat box—a pretty light luggage load when you consider that she needed warm clothing for Ireland, cool clothing for Israel, Greece and Italy, and a batch of evening dresses

Salad Dressing Mixes And Sauces on Market

New York — (U.P.) — You can add new salad dressing mixes and meat sauces from a famous French restaurant to the list of foods which require little or no preparation before serving.

The salad dressing mixes are herb and spice combinations originated by Robert Kreis, former supervising chef at the Brown Derby restaurants. They need only the addition of oil, vinegar and water, in amounts given on the package. The mixes are for old fashioned french, old fashioned garlic, California french, exotic herb and bleu cheese dressings.

But she missed tossing coins in Rome's Fountain of Trevi—a custom of most visitors.

"No coins by that time," she explained.

"I didn't buy a single Paris gown," she said. "From what I hear of their prices, we'd have to mortgage Gracie Mansion."

She added that she prefers American styles anyway.

But since her return, several foreign dressmakers, including Norman Hartnell who designs for Queen Elizabeth II, have asked whether they might run up a collection for her.

"Don't know whether I should be flattered or piqued," she said with a chuckle. "Maybe they thought I was hardly the best dressed woman they'd ever seen."
