Record Low Water Expected at Owyhee

Nyssa, Ore.—(U.P.)—New record low water levels are expected at Owyhee Reservoir within the next 10 days, Paul House, north irrigation district manager said today.

The reservoir yesterday held 153,250 acre feet of water, House said. At the present rate of release, more than 3000 feet per day, the level is expected to drop below last year's low of 125,000 acre feet within 10 days.

House said the water level will not affect the four acre feet allotted to irrigators this year. However, he declared that if a serious water shortage is to be averted next year, the reservoir watershed will need at least a normal runoff next spring.

BODY RECOVERED

Portland—(U.P.)—A Willamette river dredging crew yesterday recovered an unidentified, badly decomposed body some 250 feet downstream from Hardtack Island. Deputy Coroner Paul Haslinger estimated the body had been in the river for about a year.

SHOES LACKING

Detroit — (U.P.)—Edward Alexander, 20, brought into court a day late, told the judge he failed to appear at his trial because "my brother was wearing our only pair of shoes." The judge said, "Get another pair of shoes or don't run afoul of the law."

Around Hollywood

By ALINE MOSBY United Press Correspondent

Editor's note: The success of a comedian does not lie in merely his own talents. Behind every star is a writer who helped him get there. Today Harry Winkler, as guest columnist for vacationing Aline Mosby, tells how he came to be comedy writer for George Gobel.

By HARRY WINKLER Written for The United Press

Hollywood — (U.P.) — On July 12, 1954, I was a production planner at an automobile factory in Richmond, Calif. I had been a political science major at the University of Chicago and the only professional job of writing I had held down was briefly for an encyclopedia company.

Only July 13, 1954, I was writing for the George Gobel television show.

I had an office at the glamorous pastel blue NBC building in Hollywood; I could get a table at the Brown Derby; I was part of the fast-moving world of show business.

People often ask how I came to make this abrupt and unusual switch.

Various Jobs

In the winter of 1948 I was studying political science for a doctor's degree after my release from the army. I had decided to specialize in international relations with a view towards either teaching or entering government service. I had graduated from the university in 1937 and had wandered through various jobs such as a factory helper.

One evening I was lured to Helmsing Lounge in Chicago by my brother-in-law, Edward Fink-elberg, who somehow had the notion that I could write for the comedian entertaining there. The comedian was George Gobel, and his performance overwhelmed me.

I remember the first story he told was the "hub cap" routine. It impressed me as a gem in the tradition of American humor. My brother-in-law introduced me to George as a prospective writer, and George, with his usual gentle tolerance, encouraged me to submit my works.

Between my studies, I began to write humorous bits for George. My knowledge of this kind of writing was less than elementary, and my first efforts showed as much. After a few months I finally turned out a story George liked. He encouraged me to travel with him whenever he had club dates in Chicago. After a while I got to learn his routines and, more important, his approach to humor.

I stayed with my college work until 1951 but my dubious enthusiasm for the academic world had diminished. My wife and I migrated to Berkeley where I worked first as an order service supervisor at a cable corporation. I continued to submit material to George. When he appeared on the Saturday Night Review in 1952 on NBC, I was gratified that several of the monologues he did were written by me.

In July of 1954 David O'Malley, George's manager, invited me to move to Los Angeles to work on material for the forthcoming Gobel TV show. I have been here since. Some day, between shows, I may yet write my doctoral thesis for the University of Chicago. Proposed subject: "George Gobel looks at the fiscal structure of Iran."

Tamara Sought For Bad Checks

Los Angeles — (U.P.) — Mrs. Tamara Adele Rees Courtland, former Army paratrooper who claimed surgery changed her into a woman, was sought by police today on suspicion of passing bad checks. A police all-points bulletin described the ex-GI as "male or female."

Police sent out the bulletin for Mrs. Rees last night, shortly before she made her final appearance at the Hollywood Burlesque Theater in San Diego. The ex-GI, who lectures at burlesque houses on psychology, was believed headed for Los Angeles.

Detectives George W. Smith and Gerald E. Wright said more than 20 checks allegedly written by Mrs. Rees had bounced in markets and hotels, including one in San Francisco. One check was for $92, they said.

The ex-GI married hair stylist J. E. Courtland III in Sacramento, Calif., last month, while she was lecturing at a Sacramento burlesque theater.

The police bulletin described the former paratrooper as "male or female, white American, 30, 5 ft., 6 in., 120 pounds and dressed like a woman."

The bulletin also said the suspect's result of purported operation performed to change sex . . .

Malheur Property Suits Filed at Vale

Vale—(U.P.)—Pacific Northwest Pipeline Corporation has filed condemnation suits against three properties north of Ontario.

The suits were brought against the landowners in Malheur County Circuit Court here yesterday. The company asserted that the property owners involved could not agree on a price for a pipeline right-of-way, and asked an assessment of company damages to the land so that a price might be set.

A company spokesman said work on laying of a natural gas pipeline between Ontario and Hermiston was held up 30 days by the landowners.
