Personal Health Service

Readers should address inquiries to: Dr. William Brady, 263 El Camino, Beverly Hills, Calif.

CHRONIC FATIGUE

At the Los Angeles meeting of the American Osteopathic Association last month Dr. Alexander Levitt of Brooklyn, Brooklyn, where one of the few surviving exponents of a great newspaper tradition recently succumbed to the smog of commercialism—stated that iodine is wind-borne from the sea, the original source of all iodine, falls to the ground in rain, dew, snow, enters the soil, and plants take it from the soil and man and animals eating plants thus get the iodine which is essential for good health—or should get it in water and food.

Pollution of the air of areas of heavy industry, in Dr. Levitt's opinion, smog blocks out enough of the iodine supply coming inland in the air from the sea to impair the health of people residing in smog-plagued cities.

One of the most frequent effects of iodine deficiency, as Dr. Levitt observed in a study of thousands of cases is "chronic fatigue."

Dr. Levitt, a trustee of the American Osteopathic Association, is probably outside the pale in the opinion of the general run of medical practitioners, particularly the rank and file of the A.M.A., who still take the dog-in-the-manger attitude toward osteopaths, although osteopaths have to pass the same examination as medical candidates do to get a license to practice. This is precisely the way the old timers mon manifestations of iodine deficiency:

Now, for Pete's sake if mention of these manifestations "hits your case" or even scores a near miss, don't give it another thought, another serious thought, especially not another morbid thought until you hear from me. Let me remind you I'm still bound by the Hippocratic oath, to do good if I can but anyway to do no harm.

I'm taking a chance telling only the half of it here (enough space for the whole story not available) only because I hope you will neither think nor do anything about it until you have read the pamphlet The Iodine Ration. Ask for it in writing, signed, and inclose stamped, self-addressed envelope.

What I tell you in the pamphlet may do no good but even so I'm sure it can do no harm.
