COMING OF AGE—This informal portrait of Britain's Princess Margaret with her pet dog was especially posed in the garden of Clarence House for release on her 25th birthday, Aug. 21. It was made by famed court photographer Cecil Beaton. In royal circles, a princess "comes of age" when she is 25. Margaret's coming age also takes on import because of the fact that, at 25, she is free to marry without the Queen's consent providing she gives Parliament a year's notice and no objection is raised in Parliament.

Make this several hours ahead of time and chill in your refrigerator.

Newspapers Speculate About Princess Margaret, Captain

London — (U.P.) — The newspapers of Italy and France joined those of Britain today in speculating that Princess Margaret's 25th birthday Sunday will conclude the "love story of a century."

The name of Group Capt. Peter Townsend appeared in every dispatch and one British paper said he would remain in England when he returns next month on a scheduled visit.

The paper, the Labor Party's Daily Herald, observed that Captain Townsend would spend Sunday at the races in Belgium where the RAF war hero is air attaché.

"He has made no plans to return to Belgium," the Daily Herald said, "despite the fact that his tour of duty at the Brussels embassy has been extended to the end of the year."

Officials in London would not comment on this report. Captain Townsend got the rest of the week off from his Brussels chores Wednesday and was reported staying with friends in the country.

On Saturday, Captain Townsend, an enthusiastic horseman, will take part in a gentlemen's race at the Belgian port of Ostend and then remain to watch the races at the same course on Sunday. He returns to England Sept. 4 for the Farnborough Air Show.

On Sunday Princess Margaret becomes eligible to marry without the formal consent of her sister, Queen Elizabeth II, who could never give her consent for Margaret to marry a man who has been divorced.

In the land of Romeo and Juliet, the Italian press was faithfully counting the days up to the birthday.

"In four days Margaret has the right to marry Captain Townsend," Rome's Momento Sera said on its front page.

"Is this the conclusion of the 'love story of the century'?" asked Il Messaggero, a conservative Rome newspaper. "In a few days Margaret could announce her decision to marry Captain Townsend."

Margaret's dilemma also aroused sympathetic comments in France where the mass circulation weekly Paris magazine Jours de France said the biggest gift she will receive "is the right to decide her own fate."

London — (U.P.) — Group Capt. Peter Townsend and the British royal family were reported today to be burning up the telephone wires between Brussels and Balmoral Castle in Scotland.

Captain Townsend is in Brussels currently on leave from his position there as British air attaché. Princess Margaret is at Balmoral for her 25th birthday celebration Sunday when she becomes free to marry without the consent of her sister, the Queen.

London's tabloid Daily Sketch, in a dispatch from Brussels, said "crucial messages have passed during the last 48 hours between 41-year-old Group Captain Peter Townsend and the royal family. The messages have been concerned with the decision Princess Margaret is expected to make shortly about her marriage to him."

British newspapers were working themselves into an uproar of "will she, won't she" announce her engagement to Captain Townsend.

Five of London's nine national morning dailies already have speculated on what the princess will do, all of them said whatever she does it will concern Captain Townsend.

The most uninhibited was the tabloid Daily Mirror which demanded in huge front page type: "Come On Margaret! Please Make Up Your Mind!"

The Sketch, in reporting the telephone conversations, said Captain Townsend drove Thursday to the office of British Ambassador Sir Charles Warner after receiving a telephone call and applied for local leave.

"He has started to make arrangements to leave Brussels, perhaps permanently."

London's Daily Herald gave the same report Thursday, but the British Air Ministry said "As far as we know he will go back to his normal duties after a meeting of air attaches in London on September 12."

There was general agreement that Captain Townsend would not attend the Princess's birthday party Sunday at Balmoral but will go to the races at Ostend, Belgium, instead.
