

Senator Hatfield

Mark Hatfield To Speak Here Saturday Night

Senator Mark Hatfield, state senator from Marion county and dean of men at Willamette university, will be guest speaker at a youth banquet sponsored by the Senior Baptist league, First Baptist church, Saturday, August 20. It is set for 6:30 a.m. at the church.

Senator Hatfield has been active in Young Life work in Salem, a work planned especially to reach young people in the public schools and colleges of the nation.

Theme for the evening will be "Living Waters," and will be carried out in the decorations and table arrangements. The young people will present special music and a skit during the program. Miss Jean Jeldness will give a reading, and Mrs. James Neely and Dr. R. J. Nordquist will sing. Bill Green will serve as master of ceremonies, and the Rev. James W. Neely will offer the invocation and benediction.

Air Conditioning Units Blend With House Decor

New York—(U.P.)—The new air conditioning units make a home not only feel good, but look good.

Bulky summer-time cooling equipment has been so streamlined that now most units blend readily with the decor of a house or apartment.

Several of the new models from one manufacturer can be mounted flush with the window sill, permitting the conventional use of shades, curtains and draperies.

Another firm has designed units to be recessed in a wall or built into bookcases or other storage furniture. Still other units are portable, for use in any part of the room.

Colors generally are confined to the neutral pearl and gray combination that harmonizes with any decorative scheme. But one firm is testing consumer reaction to colored frames. These would provide a change from the standard color of the grille frame to any one of four pastel shades of green, yellow, pink and ivory.

92-Year-Old Portland Woman Enjoys Trip to South Africa

By JOHN R. HAYS
United Press Correspondent

Portland, Ore.—(U.P.)—Mrs. Sarah Johnson, 92, traveled 20,000 miles "just out of curiosity" to visit the site of her late husband's missionary work in southern Africa.

Mrs. Johnson, now back at her home here, appeared surprised that her friends could be shocked by her making such a long journey at her age.

"Why," she said, "I just up and went, that's all."

She is the widow of Eben S. Johnson, who as Methodist prelate, was in charge of a vast territory across the tip of South Africa from Mozambique to Portuguese West Africa from 1917 to 1936.

Bishop Johnson died in Portland in 1939 and Mrs. Johnson embarked on the trip to Africa as a sort of "pilgrimage" to honor his memory.

She found that many natives in the Capetown area, where her visit was centered remembered her and her husband. They showed her with handmade gifts, including crocheted dollies and beadwork.

She said she found many changes on her visit, but none so great as those she and her husband saw in their 20 years in Africa.

"When we were there," Mrs. Johnson said, "East Africans thought twin babies were bad luck and one must be destroyed. Today, twins are often welcome in native Christian families."

One of the changes most appreciated by the missionary's wife was the telephone, which she said now is a common thing in civilized portions of Africa. She remembered her husband's safaris into the Belgian Congo when his native carriers beat out messages on hollow log drums to announce the coming of the missionary to cannibalistic tribes ahead.

Mrs. Johnson stayed with her daughter, Dorothea, wife of architect Frank Spears, in Constantia, 30 miles from Cape Town.

She traveled by ship from New York to Capetown, Capt. Harry M. Scholder, master of the Robin Sherwood, wrote on a menu that Mrs. Johnson was "a good sailor and a hearty eater."

"Of course I was," she laughed. "When my husband and I sailed from London to Cape Town in 1916 the Germans had announced they would sink every enemy ship on the sea."

"We were on a troop ship with 2,000 soldiers and we spent six weeks dodging German submarines," she said. "This last trip was nothing compared to that."
