Serving OREGON PACKING COMPANY

It's a long way to L.A.

Yes, it's a long way from this processing plant in Oregon to Los Angeles, or Chicago, or Cincinnati... or to virtually all of Oregon's larger markets. The load on this farmer's truck, and the load in this refrigerated trailer, are a very small part of the great volume and variety of Oregon farm products that are trucked daily to distant population centers.

Two dominant factors have worked together to overcome the penalties imposed by distance to markets. One, of course, is the "Blue Ribbon" quality of Oregon-grown meats, fruits and vegetables. The other is the superior quality of truck transportation developed for those products. Trucks provide the swift, dependable refrigerated service from farm to market that is so vital to preserving peak flavor and freshness.

For example, last year Consolidated Freightways moved more than 18 million pounds of fresh, perishable farm products from Oregon to California alone—and much more than that to other markets.

Consolidated Freightways is only one of the many reliable motor freight carriers that serve the Oregon farmer. The trucking industry is a good neighbor to the farmer and to all other segments of the state's economy... serving agriculture, industry and business everywhere in Oregon... helping Oregon grow.

Grants Pass Scout Tells Experiences In Eastern U.S.

(Editor's Note: This is another in a series of letters from Loran Hassett, Grants Pass, who is attending an international Boy Scout jamboree at Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ontario.)

By LORAN HASSETT

Connie was here! And Diane is on her way. Boy did she leave it wet. We pulled out of Washington Sunday noon and watched swollen rivers and standing water all the way. As we were approaching Washington we saw corn knocked down all through southern Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia, and Virginia. Washington had all the windows taped for fair. You could hardly see through them.

We got into Chicago three and a half hours late on a moderately humid and hot day. We moved out of Chicago on the B and O and spent an hour at 50 or 60, all of which we thought was Chicago. Actually we had crossed the Indiana line and were in Gary a little less than half of that time. They had held the Washington train for us in Chicago so it was an hour and a half off schedule. We got into Washington five minutes ahead of schedule.

During the night we passed by mammoth steel mills which really lit the sky around. Later I found it was Pittsburgh. You could hardly tell a city was there. The country was the flattest I've ever seen and I still wonder what some of them would do in the southern Oregon mountains.

Washington has enough sights to last for a month, much less a day, but it seems we saw them all. We had trips (including Alexandria, Va.), to Mount Vernon, Arlington National cemetery, the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier and the Changing of the Guard, the Capitol, White House, Christ church, the Washington monument, and were shown many others which weren't open on a week end.

Church was attended Sunday morning and then we were off for New York. In four hours we passed through Maryland, Virginia, Delaware, New Jersey and New York. Quite a number of states when you consider how far you would get in Oregon.

New York is big. It has 8,000,000 people. And, for some unknown reason, it does seem to support the population. But of all the places I've ever seen I hope I never have to live there. Never have I felt as hemmed in and buffeted in my life.

The first night there, after eating in the most crowded automat in town, a few of us took in the show at the Radio City Music hall. All I have to say is if that place didn't have such good acoustics it sure would make a great hay barn!

The next morning we were off around the city on a guided tour. We saw the new Anglo Catholic cathedral that is being erected there. They started this church in the 1890's and still don't know when it will be completed. Then there were trips through Central Park, Wall street, and the UN, all Manhattan, the Statue of Liberty, the Bowery, Chinatown, and the Empire State building.

The next day included a yacht trip around Manhattan and Hayden Planetarium.

The watches were presented during a dinner Friday at the Rogue Valley Country club when the City Appliance employees, their wives and husbands were guests. About 20 attended.
