Eisenhower, Truman Carry Grudge, Look Magazine Discloses

Washington — (U.P.) — President Eisenhower and former President Truman speak of each other in "top sergeant" language in a real hell for leather grudge, Look magazine reports.

The once warm friends, the magazine says, have developed a bitter feud which began during the 1952 presidential campaign.

A reconciliation still is possible, the magazine quotes the friends of both men as saying, if one or the other would make the first move.

The Eisenhower - Truman friendship began to disintegrate during the 1952 campaign, the magazine reports, when Mr. Eisenhower endorsed the candidacy of all Republican candidates, including Sens. William E. Jenner of Indiana and Joseph R. McCarthy of Wisconsin, without defending Gen. George C. Marshall.

Questioned Loyalty

Both McCarthy and Jenner had bitterly attacked Marshall, questioning his competence and loyalty. Mr. Truman several times and called Marshall the "greatest living American."

Look, in an article in its current issue, said the former Democratic President has been in Washington four times since his departure in 1953 but never has been invited to the White House.

When Mr. Eisenhower went to Kansas City in October, 1953, Mr. Truman telephoned the GOP President's suite at the Muehlebach hotel to say he would like to pay his respects, the magazine said. It said the phone call was never returned.

Look said the Eisenhower staff professes total ignorance of such a call. But the magazine said this has only added to the antagonism that shows no signs of crumbling.

Quoting unnamed friends of both men, the magazine said both have spoken of each other in "top sergeant" language. It said Mr. Eisenhower has called Mr. Truman "that politician" in private while the Democratic ex-President has termed his successor a "phony" in certain traits.
