'Little Strokes' Are Man's Common Woe

Chicago—(U.P.)—A series of "little strokes" over the course of 10 or 20 years is one of the most common afflictions of man, a Chicago physician said in a recent issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The "little strokes" come from plugging of small arteries in the brain. They result in damage to brain tissue from the cutting off of circulation, wrote Dr. Walter C. Alvarez.

Onset of disease can possibly be delayed by keeping weight down and reducing the amount of cholesterol (a fat-like substance) in the diet, he said. Alvarez said the disease might be suspected when:

1. A person past 38 or so has a mental and nervous disability all out of proportion to the little indigestion, abdominal or chest pain complained of;
2. A nervous breakdown or a strange group of symptoms come suddenly on a certain day; and
3. After a dizzy spell, blackout or perhaps a fall, there came decided changes in character and perhaps an inability to work.
