The Iodine Ration is not Medication

It is discouraging to see a conferee called a quack, (writes a physician) and discourtesy will convince nobody, but some of us family doctors feel that, although you have done a creditable job of popularizing medical concepts, you lay yourself open to attacks like the one published when you recommended medication such as "The Iodine Ration" for lay readers.

We appreciate your desire to help people, but with harmless and almost inert medication such as "The Iodine Ration," the individual patient may think that if a little is good more is better and take enough to get into trouble.

Self medication of any kind, even a placebo, is not only dangerous but may lead to a loosening of the doctor-patient relationship, which I am sure you do not intend to sever.

(Signed) M. D. J.

If the iodine ration, which I recommend for every man, woman and child is "inert" or a "placebo" it can hardly be dangerous.

The physician states in his letter (not quoted) his opinion of the daily requirement of iodine, which, he says, the ordinary diet usually provides.

That is an arbitrary assumption.

As We Live

By ELIZABETH HURLOCK, PH.D.

Jealousy And Resentment Can Cause Family Trouble

There are very few families in which there is not at least one troublemaker who seems to take delight in bothering other members of the family. How to handle such a person is the problem facing this young wife.

(Q) "Last winter I was married to a young man whose younger brother had gone steady with me all through high school. When he decided to go to college, I started to go out with his older brother, mainly to get news about my boyfriend. So on how ever, we fell in love and decided to marry. I know why former boyfriend was annoyed, especially as he has always felt, so his mother tells me, that the older brother gets more than he does.

"Now I am faced with a rather difficult problem. The younger brother seems to be trying to turn the whole family against me by telling them things I said or did when I was a school girl. I am 21 years old now and worked after I finished school until I was married. I know I did and said some foolish things, as all school girls do, but I am afraid he is exaggerating these and making me seem like a worthless person in the eyes of my in-laws. How can I stop him from talking against me?"

Mrs. D.L.F.

(A) You can quickly put an end to your brother-in-law's talking against you by two methods. First, be especially nice to him and treat him as your brother instead of your brother-in-law. He is an old friend and you should not be afraid of arousing your husband's jealousy by letting him know how fond you are of your brother-in-law.

This is important, because the boy is showing his resentment by trying to turn his family against you. If you and he are on friendly terms, there is less likelihood that he will want to hurt you in any way. Break down his resentment with kindness.

The second thing you can do is to create a good impression in the minds of your in-laws by your behavior. Be mature in your actions, kind, thoughtful, and courteous to every member of the family. Should any reference be made to your former behavior, laugh it off and say, "I guess I was a silly school girl when I was young." The more mature you are now the less likely your in-laws will be to think about your past behavior.

eager beaver health and medical "authorities" in newspaper and magazine articles in recent years. I have cited some of these "warnings" here and challenge their authors to back the statements up with scientific evidence. No one has done so—I venture to say no one can do so, for the simple reason that there is no scientific evidence to indicate, for example, that vitamin D in any quantity I recommend, causes "calcium deposits" anywhere in the body; or that the use of borated talcum powder, or boric acid solutions, or boric acid ointment in the household is "dangerous." Worse still, some of these half-baked guardians of the home have not seen fit to admit that they were misled by the conclusions in the original medical journal report of "poisoning" of infants by absorption of boric acid from borated talcum, boric acid solutions or boric ointment applied to the skin of babies. The physicians who published the report later published a statement confessing that the test for boric acid in urine, on which they based their conclusions, had proved unreliable.

I repeat that in my opinion every man, woman and child needs a wee, wee bit of iodine every day to keep him or her well. For detailed instruction send a stamped, self-addressed envelope and ask in writing (a clipping will bring no answer) for the pamphlet "The Iodine Ration." And remember, doctors and folks, this is nutrition, not medication.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Drafts

If you have a pamphlet on drafts please send me one. I have never been able to subscribe to the common belief that drafts are harmful, and this causes some arguments... (K.H.)

Answer—Yes, and all to no purpose unless you catch 'em young. I have nothing on drafts, but it may answer your problem if you read CALL IT CRI—for copy send 25 cents and stamped, self-addressed envelope. This booklet deals with the common respiratory infections, bronchitis, sinusitis, etc.

pounds overweight and would like to reduce. My parents said it is all right to ask you about it. (Dorothy H.)

Answer—It is too dangerous to attempt reduction at your age, Dorothy, except under the constant attention of your physician.

What, Another?

My doctor, a prominent heart specialist, concurs with you in regard to vitamin B complex—he has just ordered me to discontinue taking digitalis and continue taking B complex as you suggest in your invaluable booklet. (Mrs. L. M.)

Answer—Why conceal the doctor's advice? My advice is that anyone taking digitalis without frequent examination and advice by his physician would do well to stop it and take instead an optimal daily heart tonic than any drug, in my opinion. Further information in booklet about heart and artery diseases—CVD—for copy send 25 cents and stamped, self-addressed envelope bearing your address.
