Mussolini Source For Many Political Ideas Used by Peron

By THOMAS R. CURRAN
United Press Correspondent

Juan D. Peron picked up many of his political ideas from Benito Mussolini.

He like to make speeches from a balcony to his followers massed in the streets below. Peron watched Mussolini in action when he was Argentine military attache in Rome. He listened and learned. He became a politician in uniform.

Peron is handsome in a florid way. In recent years he kept his hair jet-black by the use of dye. He is a sports enthusiast. During his student days he had been an outstanding boxer and swordsman and when he took over Argentina he sponsored everything that favored the development of sports in the schools.

Peron had absolutely no conception of a free press. He knew that after he had confiscated the great independent newspaper La Prensa nothing was printed in Argentina that was contrary to his wishes. He couldn't understand why the same thing wasn't true elsewhere.

One U.S. ambassador after another would be met with Peron's request to "do something" about the unfriendly attitude of the American newspapers toward his regime. He couldn't believe that Washington couldn't change the editorial policy of the leading U.S. newspapers if it really wanted to.

Peron was very skillful at playing off opposing elements against each other and eventually liquidating both.

Evita's Influence

Many people in the United States had the idea that Evita, Peron's vigorous wife who died three years ago, was the more dominant personality of the two. I do not agree. I think that she had great influence over Peron, but I also think that he used her for his own purposes, often to do dirty work he didn't want to take the responsibility for himself.

Peron's regime wrecked the economy of the country, spending all that had been accumulated before he took over and a large fortune staked away in Switzerland.
