Sausage and pineapple are wonderful teammates for Sunday brunch. When you're frying sausages and they are almost done, scatter some drained pineapple chunks around them in the skillet and stir so they'll brown quickly all over. Serve with scrambled eggs and hot muffins.

Fruit requires less sugar if the sweetener is added at the end of cooking time.

Life of Begum Aga Khan Described; Is Now Moslem

By PRISCILLA BUCKLEY
United Press Correspondent

Cannes, France—(U.P.)—Yvette Labrousse, who started in the public eye as "Miss France" and wound up as the Begum Aga Khan, is a faithful Moslem.

What is she like—one of the world's wealthiest men?

She is the product of a good bourgeois family in Lyon. She is the picture of chic. Of majestic carriage, with beautiful dark hair and an oval face, she dresses simply and elegantly.

It was her brunette beauty which in 1930 won her the "Miss France" title, queen of the bathing beauties.

Fourteen years later, she met and married the fabulous Aga, 30 years her senior, and spiritual leader of an estimated 40,000,000 Ismaili Moslems in India, East Africa and Asia.

In 1944 she embraced the Moslem religion and was rechristened "Ome Habiba," which is the name of Mahomet's last wife and means in Arabic "Mother of the well-beloved."

Went To Mecca

Last year the Begum made the difficult and arduous pilgrimage to Mecca which each good Moslem is required to make at least once.

Dressed in the cotton gown of the pilgrim, and barefoot as the law requires, she carried out each of the required rites for five blistering days when the temperature never sank below 118 degrees in the shade.

The aging Aga Khan never has made the pilgrimage and it seems unlikely his health will permit him to make it now in the prescribed summer season.

If the Begum had her way she would spend most of her time in the magnificent villa the Aga Khan has built for her at Cannes, in the hills overlooking the Riviera. It is called "Yakimour," a contraction of "yaky," the Aga's pet name for his fourth wife, and "amour," the French word for love.

The cream-colored house, with its terraced gardens, its swimming pool and its period furniture and works of art, is air-conditioned.

When she is at home, the Begum rises at 11 a.m. She says the secret of health and beauty is plenty of sleep.

She lunches with the Aga and usually, in the early afternoon, the Begum takes a drive at the wheel of her black Citroen, while her husband rests.

From time to time she visits an old people's home she has founded or drops in to see retired artists and other old friends, many of whom are partially or wholly supported by her.

She also is an amateur photographer and has recently taken up both sculpture and painting.

They Get Around

Among the Begum's friends on the Riviera is the Aga Khan's third wife Andree Caron whom he divorced "amicably" in 1943.

The Aga Khan—43rd direct descendant of the prophet Mohammed—first married his cousin Shahar while in his 20's and later repudiated her under Moslem law. In 1908, he married the Italian dancer Teresa Magliano, mother of the Prince Aly Khan. She died in 1926 of a cerebral hemorrhage.

The first of May, the couple leaves Cannes for London—for the British Derby—then it is to Paris for the horse racing season at Longchamps and Auteuil, a short stay at the fashionable northern bathing resort of Deauville, several weeks in Aix-Les-Bains, where he takes the water cure, and the end of the summer is spent in Switzerland.

In September, they return to Yakimour but in November go on to Egypt to spend the winter.

They also own stables in three countries, a suite in the Ritz Hotel in London, a villa at Deauville, and a place just outside Paris.

Her favorite colors in dress are green, cream and pearl grey and she says simplicity is the key to beauty in dress. She has this advice to offer:

"Be simple. Avoid all that strikes the eye harshly. Wear neutral colors and above all make sure that the cut of whatever you wear is good—this is the secret of real elegance."

Her jewels reportedly are valued at more than $2,857,000 and were the lure of a daring band of robbers in 1949 who held up the Aga and his wife in their car one night and stole $600,000 worth of jewelry from the Begum, including the famous marquise diamond.

Most of the jewelry later was mysteriously returned to the Marseilles police.

Commercial TV Bows in Britain To End Monopoly

London — (U.P.) — Commercial television makes its bow in Britain tomorrow, and the life of Londoners may never be the same.

Advertisements will come into millions of living rooms via the airwaves for the first time in history.

The long monopoly on broadcasting held by the government-run British Broadcasting Corp. will be broken when an announcer smiles into a camera with such words as "Try Ral-gex! A solid preparation for relief of backache, lumbago, stiff neck and rheumatism!"

49 Hours Per Week
For better or for worse, the advent of commercial TV will bring Britons an unheated of 49 hours of television per week, a greater variety of programs and, for the first time, a chance to switch to another channel if one program begins to lag.

There will be two channels—the old BBC and the new CTV (Commercial TV). Viewers will be able to watch either one without an increase in the annual license fee of $8.40 they have been paying for the privilege of watching BBC television.

And while commercials will hit the viewers regularly at a maximum of six minutes per hour at no time will the announcer say "and now a word from our sponsor." Programs will not be "sponsored" in the American sense.

Advertisers will buy time for their announcements but the Independent Television Authority, a government-appointed "watchdog" committee, will decide where to put the commercials in the broadcasting schedule. The most desirable time slots will be rotated among advertisers.

Cost to advertisers will run from as low as 90 pounds ($252) for a quarter-minute spot announcement at 10 a.m. Saturday to 1000 pounds ($2800) per minute for the peak viewing period between 8 and 9:30 p.m. Saturdays and Sundays.
