Toll of Hurricane Hilda Soars To At Least 183 Around Tampico

Tampico, Mexico — (U.P.) — The toll in human lives left by Hurricane Hilda's death-dealing forces soared to at least 183 today when the stricken port city of Tampico and surrounding villages faced a threat of more rain.

Authorities reported 183 as "known dead." Another 370 persons were "assumed dead" and countless hundreds were still unaccounted for.

Rivers Rising Rapidly

The Panuco and Tamesi rivers were rising rapidly and the Mexican Weather Bureau reported storms were building up in both the Pacific and Gulf regions, threatening to pour more water into the flooded zone.

The death toll in Tampico had risen to 127 and officials said there were now 30,000 homeless housed in 44 concentration centers in the port of 160,000. Damages were estimated at $100,000,000 around Tampico, where 70 per cent of the houses have been destroyed and most of the rest seriously damaged.

The Panuco river was still rising from dozens of smaller rivers and creeks pouring into it and threatened the main business district.

Epidemic Breaks Out

The Red Cross said most of the city's buildings and all hospitals were "jammed with injured." They estimated there were 1100 injured who had been treated and the injured continued to pour in.

An epidemic of dysentery broke out among the refugees, and doctors pleaded for more medical supplies from Mexico City. Two children died of dysentery yesterday and another 100 were reported in serious condition.

Tampico officials said the major portion of the city's wreckage was still unprobed.

They reported rescue operations in the "worst sections" were at a virtual standstill because of the spreading flood.

Wide Area Inundated

An official from the U.S. embassy in Mexico City, who flew over the flood zone yesterday, estimated "at least" 14000-square miles of lowlands were under water. He said the great red sea of the Panuco extended approximately 150 miles south of Tampico and from eight to 10 miles inland.

The official reported Tampico itself was "complete havoc." "It was almost like war again with the buildings full of frightened refugees," he said.

Ores Yield 52 Pct. Ferro-Chromium in Tests at Seattle

Ores mined in southern Oregon and northern California and milled at Laughlin Alloy Steel company's beneficiating plant at Eagle Point have yielded 59 per cent ferro-chromium when reduced in an electric ore reduction furnace in Seattle this week, according to Thomas B. Laird, executive vice-president of the steel company.

Laird said that the chromite recovery from 100 pounds of ore tested was considered more than satisfactory.

Tested Furnace

"We would have been satisfied with a 40 per cent recovery," Laird said. The low-grade ore from Laughlin's stock pile at Eagle Point was sent to Seattle to test a furnace recently rebuilt by a Washington manufacturer for installation here.

A good part of the ore, Laird said, had been rejected by the government stockpile in Grants Pass as being too high in iron content. It was milled into chromium concentrates at the Eagle Point mill and then sent to Seattle to produce the ferro-chromium product. The entire operation will be handled locally as soon as the furnace is installed at the steel company plant at White City. Ferro-chromium is an essential ingredient of the alloy steels which the company will produce here.
