Gloria Swanson Develops Suicide Complex After Driving on Streets of Rome, Paris

By GLORIA SWANSON
Paris — (U.P.) — I think I have developed a suicide complex because I have been driving (in racing is a better word for it) in Rome and now Paris.

If you have not been in either of these capitals I can assure you that all the streets are used as race tracks because all the drivers believe themselves to be either Barney Oldfield or Malcolm Campbell Jr., depending on their age.

My hotel in Rome was on a hill and a curved street (in racing terms a "hard bend") and this is where the racers (drivers) try to make the turns on the fewest number of wheels—at the same time using both the right hand side of the road and the left, as in England, if necessary.

When I inquired why everybody was not in the hospital or in a neck-brace, I was told that the Italians have the best brakes in the world!

In Paris I live only a short distance from the Arc de Triomphe around which I must drive to reach the street in which I live. This sounds simple, but it presents a dangerous problem because there are at least 10 other streets leading off

Speaker Sees City As Medical Center

"There is no reason why Medford could not be the Rochester of southern Oregon," Herbert Hunter, local medical illustrator, declared yesterday in a talk to members of Medford Kiwanis club.

Hunter spoke of the possibility of Medford becoming the medical center for this area. His reference to Rochester, Minn., pointed to the Mayo clinic.

He told of his illustrating work and how drawings make details of a surgeon's operations explicit and available in clear form for the benefit of other doctors. Hunter said that an artist can bring out details that photographs won't show and can picture operations in a schematic way. He showed several slides in connection with his work.

"The United States is tops as far as medical art is concerned," Hunter reported.

This large circle, called The Etoile, and the other 500 drivers (competitors) also want to get to one of them.

Endless Circle

Sometimes I have had to go around several times, each time edging a little closer to the outside so that when I come to my street centrifugal force carries me into it.

If you want to find out the disposition of a race just drive a car in their country.

At first I took the attitude that "sticks and stones will break my bones, but names will never hurt me" and as long as I didn't understand their language this was true, but, female fashion, curiosity got the better of me and so I asked Clifton Webb, who was impatiently awaiting my company for a cup of tea, why someone had called me a "salad"—did this mean I was green?

IN NEED OF FALCON

Denver—(U.P.)—The Air Force Academy publicity office learned today that it isn't too well informed about what inhabits the wild blue yonder. The office distributed a picture of the Cadets' new mascot, a falcon, perched on an airman's wrist—the bird is a peregrine hawk.

"No, my dear, they didn't call you a salad," he corrected me with a twinkle in his eye, "but 'salad' which is an indirect insult to your mother!"

Ignorance is Bliss
After this I quelled my curiosity with "ignorance is bliss." I have been called "the old grey mare" by my loving friends in the states but here somehow it sounds different. You see this is the place to come if you wish a "liberal" education.

I must add that none of these abuses come from my driving a big car that might get into everybody's way. On the contrary mine is extremely small. Oh! well, I suppose I might as well confess—it is a tiny convertible Volkswagen (no cracks) and still a novelty around here and Rome so naturally it is still (I am still) the target of such remarks as "Lady, you've lost your motor," when I lift my hood (its head) to fill us (it) up with gas.

"Her the Volk" (not joke) is my endearing name for my little four-wheeled friend, and I might add that she is getting just as sensitive as I am about telling everybody where we keep our motor. Granted it's kind of silly carrying it around in your tail, but still it's better than having your headlights there!

SAFETY RECORD MARRED

Naugatuck, Conn. — (U.P.) — A world safety record for the rubber industry of 10,250,000 man-hours without a disabling injury at the U. S. Rubber Co. plant here ended when a worker snipped off a finger tip in a grinding machine.

Heltzel Will Rule On SP Train Speeds

Salem—(U.P.)—Public Utilities Commissioner Charles H. Heltzel said yesterday he will issue an order in the next few days setting speeds of Southern Pacific mainline trains in Oregon.

The State Supreme Court recently ruled that setting of train speeds at city crossings is a function of the PUC, and not of the individual cities.

Heltzel said his order will apply to all incorporated cities, except Canby, and generally will comply with existing maximums set by city ordinances.
