Travelers Describe Russian Styles; Restaurant Meal for Five Costs $75

EDITOR'S NOTE: Mrs. Peter Lawford and Miss Jean Kennedy, daughters of former ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy, recently returned from a visit to Russia. The United Press asked them to write about their trip and particularly about Russian women and children.

Let's go to a fashion show in Moscow.

It's at the Dom Modeli, the principal dress house in the Soviet capital. We took our places around a platform where the models were going to display the dresses. The Russian women watching the show mostly wore print dresses and long jackets. Several of them had scarves around their heads.

Most Russian women are not on the slim side. There were no slender, thin-waisted models such as you see in Paris and New York. The models seemed to be around size 18 or 20.

There were four of them. One who modelled the older women's clothes, two young women and one girl who presumably was modelling for the teenager but looked a good deal older. Each wore a pair of black patent leather shoes with extremely thick heels which squeaked at every turn. They wore the same shoes with all the different dresses.

The clothes would be compared more to a Sears Roebuck catalogue than any of ours shown in fashion houses. But then they were made for everyday wear. The shoulders in the suits were broad with long jackets, resembling an "M" line. Most of the coats had fur-lined collars and cuffs. The wool dresses had the seam in the back and were gathered in the back at the hips.

Only one evening dress was shown—black crepe with a neckline of black sequins sewed on net. There were a few cocktail dresses in the same black-sequined style.

After seeing the models, the prospective buyer goes to the ground floor where she can buy the pattern for about 35 cents. There is no such thing as having it made or buying it there.

Come along to lunch in one of Moscow's new restaurants. We ordered caviar and shishkabab. While waiting for the meal, we heard the inevitable radio, which seems to be placed everywhere in Russia. An orchestra was playing "Want To Take A Sentimental Journey" and "Besame Mucho." That was a surprise. Five of us lunched and then came the big surprise. The bill was $75.

We went to a food market and found it terribly crowded. There is no self service such as in our supermarkets. We asked our guide about the great crowds. She blinked for a moment, then smiled and said: "I guess this shows our great purchasing power."

There were no frozen foods. Prices seemed very high. For example a quart of milk was four rubles. At American exchange rates that is $1. But that rate is, of course, artificial.

Another day we visited a cosmetic store. First we sampled the perfumes, which have such names as The Kremlin, Jubilee of the Soviet Army, Red Poppy, 8th of March, which is International Woman's Day. Prices ranged from $7 to $13. Face powder ranges from about 25 cents to $1.25. Lipsticks have no special brand names and come in plastic cases.

We were told that very few Russian women drink and it is considered "common" to smoke. We had noticed also that few women wore any jewelry whatsoever. Few even had wedding rings. Our guide explained that unless you are married in a church, you do not wear a wedding ring.

Women in Russia are encouraged to have children. Any mother who has seven is honored with the Order of Lenin, but they have little time to devote to their children once they are born. Almost all the women work and the small children are taken care of from 7:30 a.m. to 7:30 p.m. in government supervised nurseries.

We visited one near a state farm. There were approximately 150 children and some 30 tutors and nurses. A doctor is on hand at all times and there are various rooms with toys for children and, of course, the inevitable pictures of Lenin and Stalin.

After age seven the children go to school which is open every day including Sunday. The school we visited had an English class in attendance. The children are taught both English and German. We opened an English textbook at random. The first passage we came across told how capitalists in the United States keep Negroes in subservience.

The class looked much like one in the States except that the children were in uniform. For the girls it is brown wool with a white collar and black apron. For the boys a military type uniform with a large leather belt and a red scarf.

Women, in their brief leisure time, like to go, probably most of all, to the ballet. It seems to be the real Russian love and everyone knows the stories. We saw "Swan Lake" and "Sleeping Beauty." It was a beautiful performance but it was somewhat of a shock, when you sat in the beautiful theater with heavy gold ornamentation and red velvet seats, to look around and see the men in open shirts and women in flat shoes.

We left Russia with a vast admiration for the women. They will pave the streets, work in the factories and labor on the farms. But it seems regrettable that they have so little time for any home life or any real enjoyment of life which, here in America, comes so naturally to us.

Butte Falls Club To Meet Tuesday

Butte Falls—Butte Falls Federated Garden club will hold the monthly meeting Tuesday, October 18, at 1:30 p.m. at the home of Mrs. Martha Carson who recently moved to 920 West 11th street, Medford.

It is announced that a "special treat" awaits members and guests who attend.

Lodge Announces Costume Party

A costume party planned by Olive Rebekah lodge members is set for Monday, October 17 at 8 p.m., in the Odd Fellows hall, 221 West Sixth street. A business session also will be held.

Texas Doctor To Speak For Foods' Group

Joe Nichols, M.D. of Atlanta, Tex., and national president of Natural Food associates, an international organization, will be the principal speaker at an organizational meeting of the Oregon group at Grants Pass Saturday, October 22. An all day session is planned, with a meeting at 8 p.m. which will be open to the public.

Several members of the Medford Living Foods group will attend the Grants Pass meeting and anyone interested is invited to attend.

Dr. Nichols will be accompanied to Medford and Grants Pass by the executive secretary of Natural Food Associates, Tom Lavin, and the two men will be principal speakers at the sessions which will be held in the Grants Pass Junior High school. Luncheon will be served at 1 p.m. and a color film on care of the teeth is to be shown during the afternoon. This film, produced by Dr. Fred Miller of Altoona, Pa., has been widely shown throughout the United States. Bread making, using stone ground whole grain flour, will be demonstrated by women of the Grants Pass unit. A buffet dinner will be served at 6 p.m. and the public meeting will open at 8 p.m. Those interested in attending the luncheon or dinner are to make reservations with Mrs. Alma Smith, 911 Queen Anne avenue, telephone 2-2612.

Dr. Nichols is said to be a dynamic speaker who knows well what is happening to the nation's health both from the viewpoint of a medical doctor and from that of a successful farmer, since he owns a 1,000-acre farm which he reportedly turned from a worn-out piece of land into a fertile and productive farm. Dr. Nichols also is president of the board of directors of a bank in Atlanta, as well as the owner and operator of the hospital of that city.

When serving any kind of seafood, home economists suggest brown bread or pumpernickel to go with it. The flavor combination is really delicious.
