

Senator Morse Declares United Nations Represents American Ideals Put to Work

Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) Friday night said international disputes should be settled through "judicious procedure" and that the United Nations "is the American ideal of government put to work on an international front."

Senator Morse spoke before a small audience at Medford High school auditorium in connection with United Nations Week, which starts today.

He discussed three international conferences held in 1955, the World Court, and an economic approach to foreign relations, pointing out that it is "intellectual intercourse" which settles international disputes.

The greatest potentials of the United Nations, Senator Morse said, are procedure technicalities for the world, and the raising of the standard of living. "That," he said, "is the heart of the fight for political and economic freedom of choice."

The world organization, he said, has to be strengthened "so it can function in the future, and can function as a judicious procedure in the court of the world."

Senator Morse discussed the United Nations and judicious procedure in connection with the "summit" conference at Geneva, the conference on peaceful uses of atomic energy at Geneva, and the Bangkok conference.

Urged Summit Confidence

The foreign relations committee, of which Senator Morse is a member, urged the "summit" conference against the wishes of the state department. He said the conference "put Communism back on its heels, and made strides for American ideals."

State department officials, Senator Morse said, did not favor the "summit" conference because no agreement would be reached. He added that the foreign relations committee did not expect agreements, but the conference provided an "opportunity for the nation to set objectives in foreign policy."

The committee favored and urged the conference, he said, because, in a contest "between freedom and totalitarianism, we have to bring the minds of men to the cause of freedom. We have to get millions and millions who do not now know to understand our way of life." The conference was favored also, he said, to show Russia that "America wanted to put her ideals of peace in the spotlight."

Not to Be Isolated

Senator Morse said nations today "cannot be isolated in intellectual fields." The conference on peaceful uses of atomic energy, he said, "greatly advanced the cause of the people because the leaders of every nation know now what other nations have in destructive power."

The Bangkok conference, Senator Morse said, is where the United States state department "missed the boat." The department "took a hands-off policy," he said, because it believed the conference was chiefly for communist nations. Senator Morse pointed out that several neutral nations were represented at the conference.

The prime minister of Ceylon, Senator Morse said, provided the greatest service to western powers at the conference, at which the prime minister spoke favorably to western ideals. The speech, he said, "was a great rally for the free nations, and sent Communist Asian countries back on their heels."

Overlooked Program

"The World Court" of the United Nations, Senator Morse said, "is one program overlooked by Americans." To appreciate the court, he pointed out, is necessary "to be able to lose, because not all decisions will be favorable. You need to be willing to let rules of reason determine the case."

Looking at United Nations as a "great judicial body," he said it is an organization which will not "decide domestic issues, and the country concerned decides what is domestic."

"We cannot sell political freedom of choice to empty stomachs," Senator Morse said, commenting on the economic approach to foreign relations. "Freedom is both political and economic," he said, "and we cannot find a country with political freedom without economic freedom."

With complete monopoly, Senator Morse said, there is no "economic freedom. That is why I believe in minimum government controls to protect our economic freedom of choice."

Dollar Follows Flag

Foreign policy, he said, should be changed from one of the "flag following the dollar" to one in which the "dollar follows the flag." He said new economic treaties between the United States and other countries should be signed so American investors could be invited to other countries without fear of being taken over by other governments.

He called it "un-Christian" for surplus food to be stored, while people throughout the world go hungry. Senator Morse said surplus food, some of which has spoiled beyond human consumption, could be "dumped" in "areas of the world where we have to win freedom for the people." He stressed that "dumping" would be the type used by American businessmen in "clearance sales."

He pointed out that any surplus food program "should grow over a period of years," and the food should be used "internationally until there is a need for it domestically." He added that "surplus is a good asset for any country."

Cites Independence

Senator Morse said the idea that prosperity at home is based on "some sort of isolationist" policy is not true. He said if living standards in India, for example, were increased five per cent in the next 25 years, the United States would witness "greater prosperity than ever before."

The real fight against Communism, Senator Morse said, "is where there are empty stomachs."

The senator said he believed a shift has occurred in Russia since the death of Joseph Stalin. "It is not one man rule in Russia today," he said, "because the leadership knows how dangerous that is. The nation has changed to a rule by several rather than by one." The change, he said, "in the type of procedure in leadership is of great significance—the most significant thing since World War II."

"If we hope to understand the approach of foreign affairs," he said, "we must know the approach of judicious process." He added that "secret diplomacy is a thing of the past."

UN Is Open Forum

"One of the greatest strengths of the United Nations," Senator Morse said, "is that it provides an open forum to bring the Communist point of view into the spotlight."

If the "judicious process" is going to work, he said, "we have to have tools to put it to work." The only practical experience "is an ideal put to work," Senator Morse said, "and as free people, we have put ideals to work."

The senator, speaking at Southern Oregon college Friday morning, deplored conditions in schools throughout the country, and said he would introduce a bill in the January session of congress to inter-mingle federal and state funds under state supervision for schools.

He said the bill would eliminate arguments that federal aid means federal control.

Senator Morse emphasized the need for federal aid to education because "the next century will be a continuing fight for freedom which is the fight for men's minds." He pointed out that there can be no political freedom without economic freedom and that "the wealth of America lies in its people."

Supports Hospital

In an appearance Friday at the Camp White Veterans Administration domiciliary, the senator told of a full audience of members that he supports expansion of facilities there to include hospitalization, and would work for such a program.

He pointed out that Camp White is the only VA installation of its kind between Portland and San Francisco, and added that it would be a logical place for a hospital unit because of the availability of already constructed buildings.

Jet Stream Shift May Have Resulted In UA Plane Crash

Oklahoma City, Okla.—(U.P.)—A shift of the jet stream may have affected the altitude and instruments of a United Airlines plane which crashed and killed 66 persons in Wyoming last week, a specialist in upper air meteorologist said Saturday.

Wally Kinnan, an Air Force-trained weatherman and pilot, said the crash, worst in U.S. civil aviation history, occurred as the lower-level portion of the high-speed air current whipped southward along the eastern edge of the Rocky Mountains.

The jet stream, Kinnan explained, ordinarily flows from west to east. But in the autumn, massive domes of cold air move down the map from the arctic, causing the jet stream to bend around them.

Kinnan, who has flown in the area, said on the morning of the crash the "jet stream suddenly swerved south."

"At 12,000 feet, the jet stream that day had a velocity of about 80 miles an hour," Kinnan said. "This would definitely cause downdrafts on the southerly approach to Medicine Bow peak and would affect the altimeter of any plane in that area."
