

Mental Hospital Said Best Place To Treat Sex Deviates

Salem — (U.P.)—A mental hospital is better than a general training school such as MacLaren for treatment of youths with potential criminal sex tendencies, the interim committee to study sex crime has been informed.

James Lamb, superintendent at MacLaren, told a committee that boys in this class along with others having extreme emotional disturbances take so much time of his staff that they cannot provide necessary help for the remainder.

He added that only 10 of the 350 boys at MacLaren are considered sex deviates who are dangerous to society.

Need Recognized

Dr. Dean Brooks, superintendent at Oregon State hospital, said the need for a special section dealing with teenagers was recognized by his staff. He said plans have been made to use part of the top floor of the new building for such cases. However, he indicated that only limited help could be supplied at present.

Lamb told the committee it was difficult to get psychiatrists

News About Books From the Library

By MISS HELEN WEBSTER
Medford Librarian

More than 1,000 books have been added to the shelves of the Medford Public library during the past month.

During the past three months, a total of 1,906 volumes have been added, of which 711 were donated books, which are deeply appreciated. We wish it were possible to publish an acknowledgment of each gift book by title and donor, but the sheer number makes this impossible. The library wishes to assure its friends that every one has been gratefully received.

Junior and Adult
Of the 1,024 books added during the past month, about half were for the junior department and the rest for the adult department. For the junior division, there were 485 books, and 539 for the adults.

Of the latter, 208 volumes were transferred from the rental department, where they have served their terms, to the free collection. There are 366 new titles in the adult list, and the rest are duplicate copies purchased for rotation among the 10 branches of the library throughout the county.

MEDFORD (OREGON) MAIL TRIBUNE—THREE

A Nichol's Worth of . . . Comment On This and That

By HARMAN W. NICHOLS
United Press Feature Writer

Washington — (U.P.) — A dog's life isn't too tough if the task force ahead of you has seven tons of dog food.

Harman Nichols

That's what thirty dogs have to look forward to during the Navy's trip to the Antarctic, which gets under way in a few days. The main part of the trip has to do with things like looking over the terrain and plotting air strips and places to hide in case of any trouble ever develops in that far-away area.

Mere man, and there are a lot of them, will have to bundle up like crazy to face the bitter cold which sometimes gets down around 40 to 60 degrees below zero.

Dogs on Stand-By

The dogs, wearing their own fur coats, have little to worry about. First off they are on a stand-by, the trained Alaskan Huskies and Siberian Malemutes. According to the Navy, all are next-to-next-of-kin to the pups Admiral Byrd took to the Antarctic in the way back.

T-Sgt. Thomas McEvoy, who has charge of the kennel, faces a long stretch on the trip, which may run into a couple of years or more. Young Tom is a young bride-groom, but the Navy is the Navy.

Dressed for Job

Our lad, a tall, muscular youngster is leaving dressed for his job. He also knows that his pups won't have to go to work unless there is trouble, which everybody, including the pups hope won't happen.

Tom's biggest worry, though, over the long haul is whether there will be enough dog food to go around—even with the exercise of airifts to parachute the dogs down with supplies for the weary.

"Doggone," Tom complained. "You give me eight lady dogs and 22 males. What happens if the population gets out of hand?" The Navy has no answer to that. That's the sergeant's worry. They told Tom to go about his business. And that's what the sailor is doing, under orders. Leaving his own personal problems behind.

POPE MAY SEE GAMES

Rome — (U.P.) — Pope Pius XII may be able to watch some of the events of the 1960 Olympics from the window of his summer residence. Italy's national Olympic committee is considering a suggestion to turn Lake Albano, 16 miles outside of Rome, into a mammoth "water stadium" for the Olympic games. The lake is visible from the windows of the Pope's summer home Castelgandolfo.
