

Buried Treasure

by Pinkney Gage

Early Dated Gold Half Dollars Not Souvenirs

"Ever see a gold half dollar?" asked Louis, tossing a tiny, eight-sided coin on the tablecloth.

It had been years since I had seen one in such good condition that for a moment I couldn't help wondering if it were counterfeit.

On the obverse side was a Liberty head, left, surrounded by 11 stars and with a D beneath it. On the reverse were the words CALIFORNIA GOLD HALF D. around a wreath with in which was the date 1853.

"I got it in a pawnshop for $7.50," said Louis. "At that price I thought it would be a steal, and yet the top figure given in the catalogue I've looked it up in is only $10."

I tried to explain that the so-called fractional California gold pieces were probably never in general circulation, that the privately minted gold dollars, 50-cent pieces, both round and octagonal, and the quarters were very likely put out more as souvenirs than for any other purpose.

Louis disagreed. He had come across references in two old letters to the actual use of fractional gold coins in the old days.

"There were souvenirs put out later, in the 80s and 90s," he said, "and though they look like real fractional coins at a casual glance, you can always spot them by their lack of the word DOL or DOLLARS or just D. If they don't have any of those, then they are souvenirs and not worth so much."

I suggested that since he had learned all that, he needn't feel too badly about having paid $7.50 for the piece.

"I don't feel badly about it at all," he said. "As a matter of fact, I expect to sell it for considerably more."

He did, too. He set it in the head of a stickpin for an added cost of about $5 and subsequently got rid of it for $30.

BRUSSELS LACE OVERLOOKED ON COMMON FURNITURE

The window of the salvage shop featured a dining-room table set with an old linen cloth and with cheap, worn silverplate of the kind that is sold new at a dollar down and a dollar a week. The furniture was exceedingly commonplace, and consequently it seemed strange that Murdoch, a man of excellent taste with a small but exclusive shop, would spend much time looking at it.

Murdoch fingered the tablecloth, paying particular attention to a lace trim that I had not noticed. I was just on the point of deciding he was really interested in a piece of silver when I saw him order the tablecloth removed.

STAMPS CAN HELP CLOSE A BUSINESS TRANSACTION

Jimmie, a friend of mine in Uruguay for a two-year stay, did so nicely out of Peru's troubles last July that I can scarcely wait to learn the luck he's had from the ex-dictator's difficulties in September.

In July, a prospective client of Jimmie's was consulting a relative who had just managed to escape from Buenos Aires across the river.

The refugee had left so hurriedly that he had brought only little cash and an envelope of stamps which he felt he might be able to convert into money. The two were examining the stamps—Argentine air post issues—when Jimmie appeared.

"There were seven stamps in all," Jimmie writes, "six used in an envelope that had a seventh of the same issue cancelled on the cover."

"They were all of the 1.80 peso variety, blue and lilac rose in color and showing a condor on the mountain crag with a rising sun in the background. Overprinted in green was a figure of a zeppelin with the word ZEP-
