City Patrolmen Attend School in Police Training

Two Medford police patrolmen are attending a five-day school for basic police training at Roseburg this week. Medford Police Chief Charles Champlin is an instructor in public relations and traffic at the school, which will be conducted in seven Oregon cities.

Patrolmen Jack L. Sanders and Donald L. Pursel are attending the school, which is part of a program of police training sponsored by the Oregon association of city police officers and the state sheriff's association. Cooperating in the program are the federal bureau of investigation, the department of state police, the League of Oregon Cities and the Bureau of Municipal Research and Service.

The annual school is for officers who have been employed by police departments within the past year. The school covers basic police subjects with instructors from the FBI, state police and police departments of Portland, Salem and Medford.

Instructions cover law of arrest, search and seizure, mechanics of arrest, report writing, foot and mobile patrol, traffic enforcement and crime investigation.

Similar schools will be held in Klamath Falls, Pendleton, Albany, Coos Bay, Eugene and Salem during November and December.
