

Low-Cost Housing Due at Portland

Portland — (U.P.) — Plans for a 400-home low-cost housing development were revealed here this week when the Portland Housing Authority was asked to consider release of the University Homes wartime housing tract in the St. Johns district.

A plan proposed by Ted Asbahr, one of the commissioners of the authority, would release lots in the tract at a price barely covering costs. Included would be a stipulation forbidding racial discrimination in sales. The University Homes tract contains some 80 acres divided into 300 lots but the authority believed the lots could be subdivided to permit construction of about 400 homes by private builders.

Asbahr's plan included controls over maximum selling price, fixed lot valuation, minimum resale time and on types of construction. A committee was appointed to push the survey of the tract for private development.

There are 130,000 school buses in use in the United States, which transport nearly 8,000,000 pupils along 1,000,000 miles of school bus routes.
