Nothing Done To Divert Attention From Californian

By LYLE C. WILSON
United Press Correspondent
Washington —(U.P.)— The call for early public announcement whether President Eisenhower will run again suggest that some Republicans believe Richard M. Nixon is gaining a long lead on the field.

Lyle C. Wilson

Mr. Eisenhower has done nothing to divert public attention from Nixon or to weaken public confidence in his young friend. On the contrary, before and during his illness, the President's liking for and dependence on Nixon have been freely and enthusiastically acknowledged. Mr. Eisenhower now might almost be said to be giving Nixon a build-up looking toward his possible nomination for President next year.

Nixon At Advantage

However that may be, the vice-president can accept the role which the President, himself, has assigned him without being liable to the accusation that he is campaigning for the nomination. No Republican can go out for the nomination just now. They must know Mr. Eisenhower's own intentions before they may make a move. That is a considerable handicap when one of their number is placed by chance daily in a spotlighted position where he shows to most advantage. That is the happy spot in which Nixon finds himself. All others, for the time being, are in the shadows.

The vice president already is a well established national figure. That is what Sen. William F. Knowland, Senate Republican leader, may have had in mind when he called yesterday for an early decision from Mr. Eisenhower. Knowland said the party should have time, plenty of time, to look over the possible candidates before choosing.

Knowland, like Nixon, is a Californian but there is no evidence that Knowland is a Nixon-for-President man. He has teamed up, on occasion, with California's Gov. Goodwin J. Knight to lick the Nixon forces in California. Knight is maneuvering now for a bedrock alliance with Knowland to stop Nixon. Knowland is believed to be turning over in his mind a go for the presidential nomination.

Clamor for Announcement

Most Republicans were clamoring for months for an announcement that Mr. Eisenhower would run for a second term. His illness hushed that clamor, but it is beginning to rise again. Knowland is not part of it. He was saying months ago that there was no indispensable man, meaning that Mr. Eisenhower was not essential to Republican victory in 1956.

Knowland may or may not be right about that. There is general agreement among politicians of both parties, however, that Mr. Eisenhower would be the strongest candidate the Republicans could put up. Some Republicans do speculate on the possibility that he will be able to run again.

No Democrat Speculation

Democrats do not speculate about that. They have a deep feeling for Mr. Eisenhower in his illness and they were convinced almost instantly that he would be much too ill to try for another four years in the White House. If their candidate next year must oppose some lesser Republican, the Democrats will just have to make the best of it.

The Democrats would like an early Eisenhower decision, too. But it is not so important for them as for the Republicans. The early word was that Mr. Eisenhower would announce his plans around Christmas or New Year's. To delay the announcement long thereafter, if he intends to serve only one term, would add to the lead which Nixon now is achieving and to anger those Republicans who would prefer someone else.
