

Republican Leader Speaks On Party Responsibilities

Women of the Republican party should make it their duty to see that the story of the party's accomplishments and progress is told to everyone, according to Miss Bertha Adkins, assistant to the Republican national chairman. Miss Adkins spoke at a luncheon meeting yesterday noon at Rogue Valley Country club, attended by about 150 men and women.

Miss Adkins said in her opinion personal missionary work and contacts are the best method of spreading facts and information about the party, this word-of-mouth campaign to be augmented by the press, radio, television and other means of communication.

The speaker reviewed the accomplishments of the party, saying that in the three short years of the Eisenhower administration the nation had moved from war to peace, had seen incomes go up, production and employment rise, and the end of inflation.

Toucing briefly on the present farm price problem, Miss Adkins said that while it was a fundamental principle of the party to rely mainly on individual effort and initiative, that whenever a segment of the nation's economy needed bolstering, the party would take action. She stressed that "we now have the greatest peace time prosperity ever known in this nation."

Miss Adkins said that President Eisenhower's illness made it more important than before for every party member to take his full share of responsibility, since "he must not do more than he can physically carry." She said in her opinion "Ike is the most dedicated public servant of any man I know" and said that his unselfish devotion and spirit of dedication had spread to other party leaders.

Miss Adkins said the coming campaign would stress local issues, and warned that the opposition would make every effort to distract the voters from the truth. She read from a recent party release which reviewed information recently printed in a Democratic publication, and then read the Republican's refutation of the information. Many concerned the power question, and she said in passing that "Secretary McKay has done a terrific job."

The speaker touched on the federal budget, saying it would be balanced within another year, said the party was eliminating waste and extravagance and that the work must be allowed to continue since "we cannot achieve our goals in one administration."

She closed by saying that women continue their political efforts in spite of the many frustrations because they recognize its importance and because "we must add our part to the heritage of this nation."

During the question period she was asked "how are we going to defeat Morse" and answered that this could only be done by "door to door work and personal effort."

Mrs. Stephen G. Nye presided, and the speaker was introduced by Mrs. Marshall Cornett, Klamath Falls, national committeewoman. Mrs. Robert Keeney, program chairman.

Mrs. Nye announced a regular session for November 28 at the YMCA and named a nominating committee composed of Mrs. Kenneth Denman, Mrs. William McAllister and Mrs. Rex Note.

Post-War Japan Experiences Boom In Dressmaking

By JOSEPH GRANT
United Press Correspondent

Tokyo—(U.P.)—The dressmaking boom, one of the strangest post war phenomena to hit Japan, reached a climax this month when one school enrolled 5,000 new students.

But even with the rush to design and wear western style clothes, department stores report no notable decrease in the sale of the traditional kimono.

The interest of young Japanese women in dressmaking means big money for the schools. One school, the Bunka Fukuso Gakuin, now has a total enrollment of 10,000 in its day and night classes; employs 300 teachers and runs 10 dormitories to house 1,500 students from out of town.

This school now is building a nine-story building at a cost of almost $1,000,000 to consolidate its facilities.

Tuition, by Japanese standards, is not cheap. The new student pays 1,000 yen ($2.78) for entrance examinations, a $10 entrance fee, $35 tuition for one year and $8 for school bonds.

Asked why so many girls want to go to dressmaking school, one school administration officer said "now a girl can't get married unless she knows something about dressmaking. In other words, ours is a modern bride's school."

"We even have several requests for prospective brides, but when there are 10,000 girls you just can't decide. So we tell the applicants to stand outside the school gates and look for themselves."

Sweaters Are Bulkier, Holiday Hats Bigger, Say Reports From New York

By ELIZABETH TOOMEY
United Press Correspondent

New York — (U.P.) — A week in Manhattan:

If Jeanne Campbell, prize-winning young fashion designer, has her way the college girls will be around the campus in bulky sweaters that make the old "Sloppy Joe" co-ed sweaters seem downright shrunken.

Miss Campbell, one of three young designers who this week won the annual Coty American Fashion Critics' Award, has designed sweater jackets to wear with straight skirts or tapered slacks. The bulky knitted jackets come in plain colors and bold stripes.

Sweater dresses go to the other extreme. They're light-weight, clinging knits that can be changed around with different belts and jewelry.

Holiday hats are bigger, and brighter if possible than they were last Christmas season.

At a special holiday showing of the fanciest hats from top designers here this week one of the biggest was a dome-shaped hat of turquoise feathers and one of the brightest was made of a shimmering gold fabric.

It's the traditional time to bring out the first flower-covered hats, too. Hattie Carnegie came up with the newest look in flower hats—a fez shape covered with flat blossoms shading from pale pink to deep rose.

Little boys should be more washable; from the skin out, that is, one designer decided. A little boy's top coat of new dull-finish nylon lined with quilted nylon was introduced this week at one for-men-only fashion show.

"I decided that many little boys only had one winter coat and it would be helpful if it could be washed quickly," the designer for Waldes-Kohinoor explained.

The week's most unusual suggestion for mothers traveling with small babies: try using fingernail polish to entertain them.

It works for her, singer Rosemary Clooney, the wife of actor-producer Jose Ferrer, has an eight-months-old baby, Miguel, who has seen a great deal of the world already. He's been to London by ship and back by air and made several trips from here to California.

"He was far less trouble coming back from London than our basset hound," Miss Clooney announced.

"I could keep Miguel spell-bound for ages by painting one of his fingernails red, then taking the polish off and putting some on another nail. Sounds silly, doesn't it? But Miguel was fascinated!"

Air Raid Sirens

Puzzle To Russian

Washington — (U.P.) — A group of visiting Russian housing experts seemed puzzled when sirens sounded in Washington yesterday.

Charles E. Sigerty, acting head of the Federal Housing Administration, explained they were air raid sirens and added, "We're not having an air raid though, it's just a test."

"What for?" asked I. K. Kozulla, head of the Russian delegation.
