President Is Cause of Food Fad

By ELIZABETH TOOMEY
United Press Correspondent
New York—U.P.—A week in Manhattan:

President Eisenhower started a food fad a few weeks ago which continues to grow. Ten times as much beef bacon will be consumed in the U.S. in the coming year because it appeared so often on the President's hospital breakfast menus, one major meat supplier predicted here this week.

This supplier revealed his company alone had sold 40,000 pounds of beef fry, as beef bacon is called by the experts, in the past three weeks—the amount usually sold in a year.

Facts that every woman should know: A psychologist says husbands are terrible at teaching their wives how to drive a car.

After studying tape recordings of actual driving lessons, Alfred L. Moseley, consulting psychologist for the American Mutual Liability Insurance Co., reported that husbands usually flunk as driving instructors.

Used to be that a girl had to wait to grow up before she could drift around the house in a frothy negligee.

Now little girls' lingerie is copied after mothers' petticoats, peignoirs and all. Little girls modelled the latest thing in filmy underthings at a fashion show this week given by the Yolande corporation, a company which formerly made only grownups' lingerie.

Women outnumber men in office clerical jobs three to one. A new survey prepared for the National Office Management Association shows the gradual disappearance of the male from the clerical field. There were eight times as many men as women in clerical jobs in 1890. By 1920 the numbers of men and women were about equal. And from 1940 to 1953 the number of female office workers doubled.

Shortage of Nurses to Continue For Many Years, Official Belief

By ELIZABETH TOOMEY
United Press Correspondent
New York—U.P.—If you get sick any time between now and 1960 you may become the victim of a national shortage—nurses.

The shortage will continue to plague us for at least 15 years, but we can't blame our young girls. A higher percentage of 18-year-olds entered nursing in 1954 than in 1940.

We simply have fewer 18-year-olds now, which can be traced back to low birth rates in depression years. And we have twice as many people admitted to hospitals each year as we did during depression years.

Mrs. Lucile Petry Leone knows as much about our chances for having a nurse stand by our sick bed as any women in the United States. She is the assistant surgeon general of the United States and chief nurse, office of the U. S. Public Health service.

High Birth Rate

"We may catch up in 15 to 20 years," Mrs. Leone said in an interview here. "The birth rate was high in the early 1940's, and by 1959 those girls will be the right age to begin training."

Mrs. Leone, a pretty, white-haired woman, came here this week from Washington to accept a group award from the Albert Lasker foundation for leadership in improving the nation's sick room situation.

More Hospital Aides
"We must have more paid hospital aides to take over some of the clerical duties the nurses now do," she said. "It has been shown that the average head nurse spends as much as 30 per cent of her time on clerical duties, and it could be cut to 5 per cent."

New hospitals in small communities are helping too, she said. A woman who has retired from nursing often goes back into the field when her community gets its own modern hospital.

"Of course, one of the ways to make nursing more attractive would be to increase salaries," Mrs. Leone said. "That may come too. But each year more opportunities for nurses to move into executive positions are opening. Until 1940 there was no nurse who made a five figure annual salary. Now there are a number of $10,000 a year nursing administration jobs."

To save defrosting time, freeze hamburger into patties, but be sure to separate them with paper or foil. They're ready for the frying pan in just a jiffy that way.

Next time you make mashed potatoes, vary them by adding 1/2 slice of crumbled, crisp bacon to each serving.
