$5,000 Bill Not Too Popular

Washington — (U.P.)—In case you hadn't noticed, the $5,000 bill has not been "as popular a medium of exchange" as the $10,000 bill, says the U.S. Treasury.

The Department's latest report shows that as of May 31, there were 911 bills of the larger denomination in circulation as compared to 678 of the smaller.

Expressed in another and perhaps more impressive way, there were over $9,000,000 worth of $10,000 bills circulating when only $3,400,000 of the $5,000 variety were making the rounds.

The Treasury points out that these big bills have only a limited use. For example, they are used to clear balances between banks or to close large business transactions where cash is demanded.

Sawbuck Replaced. Even so, and despite a booming economy, use of these big bills is on the wane. Fifteen years ago, there were $60,000,000 worth of the $10,000 notes in circulation.

On a more familiar level, the Treasury report shows that the $20 bill has replaced the $10 bill as the common denominator of the American monetary system. Before World War II, the economy was firmly based on the $10 bill. But the sharp rise in wages and prices that came with the war pushed the $20 bill forward.

There are now about $9,500,000,000 (B) circulating in the form of $20 bills. The $10 bills in circulation amount to $6,400,000,000 (B).
