

WHAT GOES UP MUST COME DOWN—Doug Peters of UCLA takes the overhead route as he attempts to score against Washington from the three yard line in the first quarter at Los Angeles. He didn't make it here but went over for the score from the one yard line on the next play. The Bruins trailed until the last 19 seconds and then booted a field goal to win, 19-17.

New York (U.P.)—With pro football players getting kayoed more often than second rate club fighters, there seems to be solid substantiation today for charges that they are playing at least a rougher, if not a dirtier, game.

Players and impartial observers alike have concluded that the assault and battery pace has picked up considerably this season. Among the most outspoken were Otto Graham of the Cleveland Browns and Doak Walker of the Detroit Lions.

But it remained for one National Football League figure, who wishes to remain unnamed, to come up with the "why."

Strategic Peak Reached "Strategically, pro football has reached the peak," he explains. "Scouting has become so minute that we know each other's every move, offensively and defensively, individually and collectively."

"The only way to win under those conditions is to be more violent than the opposition."

The "violence" aimed for, is for perfectly legal yet more savage contact. With players bigger and faster on the whole, it makes for colossal contact and the resultant flare of tempers.

Graham, knocked colder than a deep freeze unit two weeks in a row, asserted that the game was getting even dirtier. It figures, when you consider that the Browns long have visited retribution on anybody who deals harshly with their meal ticket.

In the Browns' final regular season game last year against Detroit, they were trailing with a minute to go and a touchdown pass would have won the game. But on the semi-final play, one of the opposing linemen worked Otto over. The Browns ignored the pass play that might have won the game. They threw a line play at the unfortunate aggressor and evened the damage.

Plays Masks Show Proof Walker made no bones of the fact that there were ungentlemanly combatants on every club—including his own. Doak said that the ever increasing use of face masks tends to prove the increase in errant elbows and knees. He also attacked "eye scratching" and rabbit punching.

Mike Jarmoluk, a rugged tackle for the Philadelphia Eagles, never has worn one of the masks. Against the Browns, who had three players knocked out in the same embroglio last week, Mike was separated from two teeth. From now on he'll wear a mask.

With the violence of the play, pro football this season will set an overall attendance record for the fourth straight year. It shows you where the boxing crowds went.

Crater Plea To Stay in A-2 Rejected

A petition of Crater high school to remain in A-2 class for athletics next year has been rejected, Coach Leonard Warren said today.

Crater petitioned the district committee and schools of the southern division of District 6 A-2 turned down the "Comet plea in a poll.

Present enrollment at the Central Point school is 560 and the average daily membership reportedly is well above the 500 mark which separates A-2 from A-1. That means that, unless there is a drastic drop in enrollment, Crater will go into A-1 rivalry next school year with Medford, Ashland, Grants Pass and Klamath Falls. The Comets will continue in A-2 through next spring.

Oregon School Activities association regulations permit schools to petition to go into higher or lower classes. The OSAA delegate assembly acts on the recommendation of the district committee. Prineville in enrollment qualifies for A-1 but has continued in A-2 rivalry. Ashland reportedly stayed A-2 one year despite being over the ADM limit.

District committeemen to whom Crater applied were Glenn Hale, Eagle Point, chairman; Wayne McMurray, Coquille, and George Elliott, Henley.
