As We Live

By ELIZABETH HURLOCK, PH.D.

Let Family Help Mother Keep Outside Interests

Becoming completely absorbed in any one thing can be bad.

(Q) "I am married, have three children ranging in age from nine to 14 years, and a large house to take care of. There are so many demands on my time from every member of the family, I have had to give up most of my outside interests. I used to belong to a bridge club of congenial women but it seemed every time there was a meeting, something came up to keep me home. I resigned from the club last year. The same is true of the college club to which I belonged. Now I am finding it difficult to serve on any church committees or even the P.T.A. Most of my friends have families but they keep up their outside interests. I feel I am getting very narrow and the time will come, when the children are grown up, when I will be left high and dry. Have you any suggestions?" Mrs. R. G.

(A) Yes. Get the cooperation of every member of the family so you will be able to have some outside interests and activities. Your family should help you live your life just as they make "demands on you."

Most clubs and community organizations have regular times for their meetings. Members know ahead when the meetings will be held and can plan accordingly.

Your oldest child is quite old enough to take charge of the household should a meeting come when the children are at home. This may interfere with something that teen-ager wants to do, but he or she must make some sacrifices, just as you do. In the evenings, ask your husband to take charge so you can attend some community organization and then urge him to do likewise while you stay home.

Couple Survives Plunge Into River

Ontario, Ore. — (U.P.) — An airman and his wife were hospitalized yesterday suffering from shock and exposure after their car skidded on icy pavement, crashed through a bridge railing and plunged into the Malheur river one mile north of here.

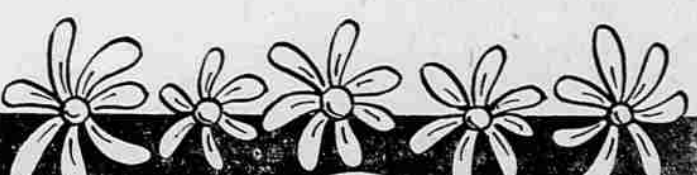

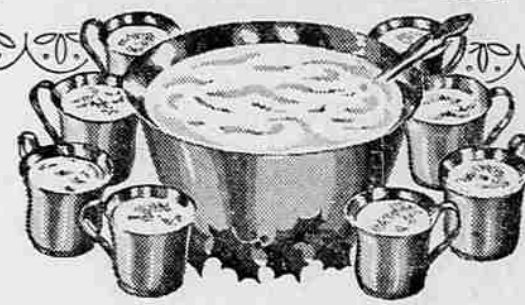

Sgt. Edward Moore, 21, and his 19-year-old wife, Ruth, of Paine Air Force Base, Everett, Wash., were en route to New Mexico on furlough when the accident occurred.

Moore reported that the car landed in six feet of water and was buffeted from side to side by the swift current. He said he and his wife escaped by kicking out windows in the car. They swam and waded the few feet to shore and were picked up by other motorists.

The temperature at the time was 15 degrees.
