

Priest Threatened After Teacher Beaten In Integrated Class

Erath, La. —(U.P.)—A Roman Catholic priest disclosed today that his life was threatened after a bishop excommunicated two women accused of beating a teacher of an integrated catechism class.

Father A. J. Labbe, pastor of the 2500-member parish which includes Our Lady of Lourdes church where the beating incident was reported, said a college student is acting as his bodyguard.

Two women were excommunicated from the Catholic church, harshest and most feared disciplinary measure imposed on a member, and other parishioners were threatened with similar treatment by Bishop Jules B. Jeanmard of Lafayette.

Orders Nailed To Door

The orders were nailed to the door of Our Lady of Lourdes Church and read to all masses yesterday, threatened of the church members with "automatic excommunication if there are any more signs of violence."

Father Labbe said the decree stated that if there are any more signs of violence the church also will be closed.

The order by Jeanmard, for 25 years a bishop who has been cited by Negro parishioners in the past for his "historic, priestly leadership and service," will remain up until ordered down himself. Anyone else removing the decree was threatened with "immediate excommunication."

Classes in the church school were halted after what Labbe described as the "severe" beating of the teacher but he said instructions would be resumed on Dec. 5.

The latest disorder followed by several weeks the closing of a Catholic church at Jesuit Bend, La., because parishioners there had objected to the use of a Negro priest for Sunday masses. The FBI has been investigating the Jesuit Bend affair.

The Catholic Church in Louisiana has taken other strong measures recently to slap down what it deems interference in church functions which have arisen because of the state's traditional adherence to the color barrier in most all public affairs.

Search Called Off For Vida Woman, 43

Eugene —(U.P.)— Search for a 43-year-old Vida, Ore., woman was called off Saturday.

The Rev. and Mrs. J. M. Shelley said they were certain their semi-invalid daughter, Rachel Shelley, had slipped from a cliff and fallen into the McKenzie river and drowned about 25 miles east of Eugene.

Bloodhounds used in the search returned repeatedly to a rock at the edge of the stream where the woman's raincoat and one of her trinkets were found.

Hells Canyon Group Wants Permit Lifted

Washington — (U.P.) — The National Hells Canyon Association filed a petition today with the U.S. Court of Appeals asking it to set aside a Federal Power Commission order granting Idaho Power Co. a license to construct three dams in the Hells Canyon area.

Hells Canyon, on the Snake river between Idaho and Oregon, is the deepest gorge on the continent and one of the outstanding dam sites in the Columbia river basin. Whether the government or private interests should develop power there has been a controversial issue for more than 15 years.

An FPC examiner ruled earlier this year after lengthy hearings that Idaho Power should be permitted to go ahead with construction of one of its three proposed dams, but said decision on the other two should be withheld until later. The commission, however, authorized Idaho Power to go ahead with all three dams at spaced intervals.

The National Hells Canyon Association favors a single high dam built by the federal government.
