WHAT IS WRONG WHEN A GALLBLADDER OPERATION DID NOT HELP?

Any number of persons ask why they are just as miserable after their gallbladder operation as they were before. I cannot answer them without asking them a number of questions, and even then I might be puzzled. If, before the operation, a woman had been suffering from colics needing morphine, then we can be almost certain that her symptoms were due to a diseased gallbladder, and her operation was needed.

If, now, she is still suffering from occasional spells of the old pain in the abdomen just below her ribs on the right, and especially if these spells are associated with vomiting and brief fever, I would suspect that at the operation some stones were missed and left behind in the duct that runs from the liver to the bowel just below the stomach. One cannot blame the surgeon for this because such stones are often very hard to detect. In a case of this type the patient may be forced to accept another operation. Since it may be a very difficult one, it should be performed by an unusually able surgeon.

In my experience, the persistence of a lot of nervous distresses after a gallbladder operation is due to the fact that the gallbladder never was responsible for the symptoms: They were all coming out of a nervous or troubled brain.

In many cases today an X-ray man, trying to be helpful, reports that the gallbladder emptied a little slowly, or it was slightly deformed (usually since birth) or it looked as if there were adhesions about it. Then the surgeon, also wanting to be helpful, removes what turns out on examination to be a normal gallbladder. Naturally, this does not do any good.

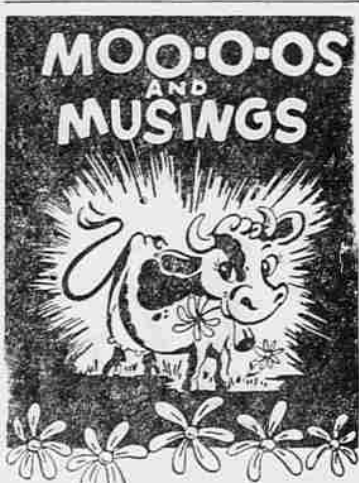

In most cases, what happened was that there were some stones in the gallbladder but they were not producing any of the symptoms complained of. They were about as harmful to the woman as if they were out in her handbag. She never had a colic and she had a good digestion without any flatulence. Naturally, then, the removal of her gallbladder could not possibly have done her any good.

Why did the woman's physicians make the mistake? Because in our medical schools there is no one to teach the students one of the most important courses that is needed, and this would be a course on the art of disregarding those findings that have nothing to do with producing an individual's symptoms. Because, when I was in college, I never had such a course, I can remember 40 years ago promising that if she would let a surgeon remove them she would be rid of her migrainous sick headaches.

She had her operation; her headaches became worse, and then and there I learned my lesson. Since then I have seen a hundred migrainous women similarly disappointed after an operation, and so today I am satisfied that gallstones have nothing to do with the production of sick headaches.

I remember in my ignorant youth telling an elderly woman that perhaps some inflammation in her diverticula, or harmless little pouches on the colon, was causing her terrible and constant "miserable" all down one side of her body. Today I would never think of saying so silly a thing;

It is now estimated that there are ten million trucks in use in the United States.

This is fine but how in the world do they all manage to get on the Medford-Ashtland highway at the same time?

I would see that the woman had had a little stroke. I remember with shame another case in which I found that an elderly woman with a constant "miserable" in her whole abdomen had a fibroid tumor of her uterus. When I got a surgeon to take it out she was no better. Then I did what no teacher had ever taught me to do; I talked to the family and found that my poor patient was almost insane. She spent each night walking through the house, turning on all the lights, wringing her hands and weeping in an agony of restlessness. She belonged in a mental hospital.

What should all this experience teach? It should teach us physicians not to grasp at what I call "diagnostic straws," and it should teach you readers to put faith more often in what your sensible old family doctor tells you. When he tells you that no matter what might be found on a thorough examination, your

FALSE TEETH That Loosen Need Not Embarrass

Many wearers of false teeth suffer real embarrassment because their plate dropped, slipped or wobbled at just the wrong time. Do not live in fear of this happening to you. Just sprinkle a little FASTEETH, the alkaline (non-acid) powder on your plates. Hold false teeth more firmly, so they feel more comfortable. Does not stain. Checks "plate odors" (denture breath). Get FASTEETH at any drug counter.

Announces Granddaughter
South Portland, Me.—(U.P.)
Neighbors kept asking Mr. and Mrs. Harold Etter day after day if they had become grandparents.

When their daughter, Mrs. Barbara Romano, finally gave birth to a seven-pound, 12-ounce girl, Etter found a way to make the announcement to the neighborhood in a hurry. He ran up a diaper with pink ribbons fluttering from it on the flagpole in the front yard.
