Winter Road Projects Planned By County

A number of winter projects are getting under way by the Jackson county roads department, County Engineer Paul Rynning reported today.

Crews have started operating a rock crusher at Dead Indian road quarry and one on Old Military road west of Central Point to prepare rock for next year's road work, Rynning said. The crushers will be in operation for two or three months.

Some roadside clearing is being done in the Rocky Butte section of the Butte Falls highway, in preparation for widening and straightening next summer, Rynning added.

Approximately 1,000 miles of county roads are built and maintained by the 140 men of the road department, according to Rynning, and about half this number work on maintenance during winter months.

From 60 to 80 million gallons of gasoline are needed every year to operate the equipment used in the American pulpwood industry.
