

Convenient Index Form Lists Ways To Make Christmas Shopping Easier

By H. D. QUIGG

 New York — (UP) — Only 14 more shopping days till Christmas—and they'll getcha if ya don't watch out.
 Here are some helpful shopping hints on how to parry the perils of aching-arch alley, listed in convenient index form.

Clerks — How to attract their attention: Be polite, but be prepared. If at first the clerk doesn't notice you, don't stand there glowering and muttering. Remember the Christmas spirit. Look pleasant. Relax. Then when, at last, the salesgirl says, "Who's next, please?" pull out a moose horn, sound a blast in her ear, and say softly, "Why, I am, Honey."

Crowded Counters — How to reach them: Don't try to elbow your way in. You'll never make it. Bring your own neighborhood team, with a husky line and fast backfield. The split-T is an excellent lineup to use. With practice, you can open a quick hole through a solid mob five-deep, make a purchase, and get away to attack another counter. Teamwork does it.

Elevators — How they run: Bluemoon schedule. Use the stairs.
Feet — Comfort of: The late tap dancer Bojangles Robinson used to say that every night he filled a galvanized bucket with gin and soaked his aching feet in it for an hour before he went to bed. Next morning, they never remembered what they did the day before.

Gifts — How to choose them: Use a ouija board.
Junior — How to handle him: Go to the department store pet shop, buy a dog or cat carrier—the suitcase kind with a handle and with a little barred door in front—put junior in it, shut it, and leave it parked there while you shop. Tell the clerk to give him a little water from time to time. If you must take him with you, put him in a strait jacket and lead him by a leash. Remove the jacket only when the time comes to pull the store Santa's whiskers.

Money — How to spend it: The best method is the straightforward honest one. Bargain and spend what cash you have. Then charge things up to the store's limit. Then kite a few checks. Then get a floor plan of the store and commit to memory just where on each floor are the things you want; this is for working stealthily in the dark.
Use a burglar's Jimmy to let yourself in at night. Start at the top floor and work your way down.
Original — How to be: Your friends will expect you to give them something different. And so will your cousins and your sisters and your aunts. This year, buy mustache cups for all the men on your list, and hand-cranked milk churns for the women.
