Bomb-Scarred Japanese Girl Interviewed in Hospital Room

By ELIZABETH TOOMEY United Press Correspondent
New York—U.P.—Hiroko Yatsuka, 24, lay silent in the hospital bed near the window, her right arm bent in a rigid sling and her hand connected by a skin graft to her left cheek.

Only her eyes moved when she was introduced. They shone brightly from the face half concealed by the bed sheet she pulled up over the left side of her face.

The hospital room had signs of long occupancy. Get-well cards were taped in neat rows to the wall at the foot of the bed. Across the room Atsuko Yamamoto sat on the edge of the second bed, a printed cotton kimono covering her hospital gown.

"She speaks English a little," Atsuko said shyly, nodding toward Hiroko.

Slowly, in halting English and with the help of Mrs. Helen Yokoyama, an American-born Japanese woman as interpreter, Hiroko told her story.

She was 14 years old and working as a volunteer laborer clearing debris from the basement of a Hiroshima building when the atom bomb fell in 1945, Hiroko explained.

Many Operations
Japanese doctors performed 14 operations to try and repair the bomb scars on her face, arms and legs. American doctors already have performed six operations, and will have to do "many more" before she goes home.

The atmosphere was anything but gloomy in the hospital room as Hiroko talked softly, her mouth barely moving to protect the new skin growing to her cheek.

"Of course," she said when she was asked if she looked forward to going home completely recovered. Both girls giggled, and Mrs. Yokoyama explained that "of course" was a new expression they had just learned.

"My dream was to be a school teacher when I was in the 6th grade," Hiroko said. She became seamstress after the war, however, so she would work without facing people. Now she hopes to teach sewing.

Mention of possible marriage set off another duet of giggles and both Japanese girls lowered their eyes in embarrassment.

"They are from the old school, and they are too shy to talk about such things," Mrs. Yokoyama said. "The teenagers in Japan now are much more free."

Some Envy
She and her friends don't completely approve of this freedom, Hiroko said, though they do envy the independence an unmarried American girl has at the age of 24.

"It is difficult for us," she explained. "In Japan we must act with great dignity if we are not married at 24."

Hiroko is fascinated now by American movies, American household gadgets, the Yankee baseball team—and, she added reverently—"Peekskill."

"Ahaah, Peekskill," Atsuko echoed ecstatically.

A man and wife in Peekskill, N.Y., Mrs. Yokoyama explained, opened their home to the two girls between hospital visits. The girls are sure it is the greatest little town in the world.

Miss Annette Gray closed the program by reading Christmas poems.

Lake Creek —The December meeting of Lake Creek Extension unit was held at the home of Mrs. Carl Webb, Eagle Point. Guests were Mrs. Grace Haskins, mother of Mrs. Webb; and Mrs. Hazel Marks, of Williams, Ore. Also present were Mrs. Ben Gardner and Mrs. Paul Johnston of the Reese Creek unit.

Mrs. John Kitchersib is a new member of the unit.

The project lesson on "Main Dish Meals" was given by Mrs. Nora Bradshaw and Mrs. Leland M. Charley. A lively discussion in the afternoon session brought forth many of the members' favorite dishes, and some of the recipes will be used at the January meeting.

The final lesson on "Gift Wrapping" was given by Mrs. Ernest Burrell and Mrs. Lester Messal. Members participated in the wrapping of gifts and the results were gratifying to the leaders.

A Christmas gift exchange was held. Mrs. Webb had her home decorated in the theme of the season, with a very large tree and boughs around the rooms.
