The Medical Roundup

More on Criminals

Why do we not recognize habitual criminals as hopelessly weak, anti-social or vicious or mentally retarded persons who are unable to resist the temptations that come with alcohol or drugs or bad company? They are unable ever to settle down to earn a living, or to be satisfied with what little they can earn without much education. Pick up any newspaper and read of the thieves captured that day, red-handed. Most were recently freed from jail or were out on parole.

There should, obviously, be several types of detention camp for different types of criminal. Stout prisons with cells are needed for the tough and dangerous criminals. Camps like the one in Chino, Calif., can take care of thousands of reasonable men who have sense enough not to try to escape because escape and recapture will only mean a return to an old-fashioned and dreaded prison.

What I wonder about is why, in all these thousands of years, mankind hasn't had sense enough to build, perhaps on an island, a detention camp in which there will be no thought of punishment or harshness or even of making the detained persons uncomfortable or unhappy? The main idea will be to keep a weak type of person or a born criminal away from temptation. The alcoholic will be kept from alcohol; the dope-fiend will be kept from drugs, and the thief will be kept from money, mink coats, jewelry, and automobiles. On the island there will be no persons worth robbing, and no "fence" who can turn stolen goods into money.

Can't Get Away With It

The forger will be unable to write or cash checks; the swindler will be so well-known that it will be hard for him to find a purchaser for his mythical mine or oil-well. The confirmed gambler will doubtless go on gambling, but he will not be able to get away with more than a little scrip, such as may be used by the inmates. The psychopathically delinquent person will find it much harder to get into mischief. All those persons who are at all employable will be put to work to earn their keep and perhaps to support their family. Many will be taught a trade, so that eventually they can go back into society to earn an honest living. Those who wish will be allowed to have with them wife and children.

Most of the inmates probably would be sentenced for life, but with the passage of years many doubtless would be given a chance to see if they could go straight.

In such a colony inmates would become good citizens. Those who continued to make much trouble would soon be transferred to "tougher" prison. Penal colonies of the type that I envisage would save this country billions of dollars in stolen property, and in the salaries of the policemen and detectives who constantly have to be re-arranging these grown-up bad boys.

Dr. Alvarez regrets he hasn't the time in which to read or answer requests for information.

X-Ray Movies Soon Will Make Commercial Debut

Rochester, N. Y.—(U.P.)—X-ray motion pictures, equipment for which was designed and developed at the University of Rochester medical center, soon will make their commercial debut.

The General Electric Company's X-ray department of Milwaukee has been given the contract to turn out the first such units to be manufactured in the United States.

The new apparatus has been designed for use with conventional X-ray equipment and can be used for taking pictures with the patient seated, standing or lying down. The picture-taking area is 15 inches by 15 inches, almost as large as the conventional X-ray film. Either 16mm or 35mm film can be used with a speed range of 3 1/4 to 30 frames per second.

The heart of the device is the f/0.71 lens which is about 30 times faster than the lens on a newspaper photographer's camera. Also vital is the electronic triggering mechanism which turns the 100,000-to-130,000-volt X-rays on and off to 30 times a second, in perfect synchronism with the motion picture camera, minimizing the X-ray dosage that the patient receives.
