Sale of Christmas Trees Best in Years

Salem — (U.P.) — The sale of Christmas trees was the best in several years, the State Forestry Department said today, and it praised commercial harvesters for selling almost all of the trees on the corner tree lots.

"Few trees were wasted," Charles H. Ladd, chief farm forester said. He reported that prices were the highest ever received for well shaped trees.

Last year foresters estimated that eight per cent of the trees harvested were left unsold on commercial lots.

Figures indicated some 1,250,000 trees, mostly Douglas and true firs, were harvested from state timberlands. The trees were valued at about $1,500,000.

Murderers Who Escape the Chair by Pleading Insanity

One of the sad sights to be seen in an American Court of Law is that of a well-to-do murderer who is going to be let off on a plea that, for a few hours, he was Insane. Usually, two or three experts testify that, at the time of the assault, the man was insane and unable to tell right from wrong; while three other experts testify that he was sane.

The decision as to which of the experts was talking most foolishly is then put up to a jury of laymen who know absolutely nothing about the subject, and who have no ideas as to what the early or transient symptoms of insanity are. If they had to question a man as to his sanity, they would not know how to go about it.

What amuses me is that, for the purposes of a Court, the man has to be either sane or insane; he cannot be half-way between. And yet, all of us men and women know that there are a million persons in this country who, while they may never become queer enough so that they have to be locked up, are too queer to live comfortably with anyone, or to marry anyone, or perhaps even to work with anyone.

What happens usually at the murder trial is that if the man is let off on the plea of temporary insanity and is committed to a hospital for the criminally insane, within a few weeks, his lawyers are trying to get him freed on the plea that he is sane again. It is far from a pleasing or edifying spectacle!

Should Think of Psychosis

What bothers me, also, is that when a man who, from the story of his behavior is obviously psychotic, murders someone he is likely to be quickly convicted and sentenced to death. Sometimes the question of insanity is hardly raised. Why? Because, as the papers say, it was so atrocious a murder over which the man showed not the slightest compunction. Actually, the fact that a murderer was needlessly brutal, and later showed no regret, should make everyone think of psychosis.

In many of the cases, if the court were to ask a couple of psychiatrists what they think of the man, even without seeing him, they would say "Don't bother to try him; he is psychotic." Occasionally, I read that a mother is being tried for the murder of a child or two. Why try her? Why waste time and money? She must have been out of her mind. Just ask her why she did it and she may say, "Because God told me to."

One wonders why our penal code cannot be amended so that, if experts on insanity are to be heard, they will be employed by the court and paid by the court; they will be "friends of the court," with no interest one way or the other in what happens to the prisoner. Their only interest will be to help the judge and the jury in understanding the man and why he acted as he did.

Would Listen to Family

Often, I think that much better than having experts before the Court, would be the listening to the members of the patient's family, his neighbors and friends, and the people with whom he works—if he ever did work. I know that often, by talking to such people, in a few minutes I can learn much more about a man's sanity than I could learn by talking to him for two hours. I remember when one of my associates in San Francisco, a brilliant physician, who for months was going insane; it was very hard for me, who knew him well and worked alongside of him, to be sure of what was happening. The trouble was that he had always been so eccentric. All that his friends could say was that, about a certain time, he became a bit more eccentric and queer and choleric than he ever had been before. His behavior became too odd for him. Often, when discussing the sanity of a brother or a father or uncle with his family, they will say, "But he was always eccentric and odd." But then a relative will say, "But no, he was never that bad before;" and this is the essential point. He never was that bad, and only the family or close friends can say this.

One great difficulty in the way of caring for the insane in courts of law is that the lawyers stick to an ancient definition of insanity. I remember a paranoid man who easily went free after he had murdered his neighbor who hadn't done him any harm. He assumed that the neighbor had been planning to make love to his mousy little wife. The lawyers argued for days as to whether the man had the requisite knowledge of right and wrong; that was all that bothered them. But the jury let him off because, as they said, everyone in town knew he was crazy! Later he shot another man who had done him no harm.

Tear Gas Grenade Not Funny, Police State

Gaston, Ore. — (U.P.) — Police Chief Robert T. Wiss said today he didn't think someone's idea of a Christmas joke was very funny. Some 200 persons were chased from a dance here early Monday when a tear gas grenade was dropped into a rest room waste-basket. The chief said he expected to make an arrest.

Moscow Satisfied With Pope's Message

London — Pope Pius XII's views on disarmament in his Christmas message "command attention," Radio Moscow said Monday night.

The Italian-language broadcast monitored in London said that public opinion in many countries "heard with satisfaction" that part of the speech in which "the Pontiff expressed himself in favor of prohibiting nuclear weapons, in favor of the termination of atomic tests, and for setting up of armament supervision."

Portland — (U.P.) — State Sen. John C. F. Merrifield has announced his resignation as general agent and partner in the Merrifield insurance agency. He listed press of other business and plans for increased political activity as reason for his resignation.

Emergency Funds For Flood Victims

Salem—(U.P.)—Grants from federal emergency funds will be available to flood-stricken cities and counties of Oregon for restoration or repair of sewer and water lines and for repair or building of county bridges, Gov. Paul L. Patterson said yesterday.

The governor said he had been advised that such applications for grants should not be made until a complete survey of damage has been made.

As a result, he has asked Arthur M. Sheets, civil defense director for Oregon, to arrange for the appointment of teams to make the necessary surveys.

As soon as these surveys are completed, the proper applications will be made to Washington, D.C.

From present reports the greatest flood damage to utilities and bridges occurred in the Coos Bay area and in southern Oregon, particularly in Douglas county, he said.

Gov. Patterson said he was completely satisfied with the work performed during the flood period by the civil defense agency, which has been manned on a round-the-clock basis since the beginning of the flood.
