

Buried Treasure

by Pinkney Gage

City-State Now Gone But Its Stamps Exist

Recently, while having my watch repaired, I noticed an orange colored stamp stuck in the edge of the mirror which hangs above Irv's desk. I made out a double-headed eagle peering to right and left as the chief feature of its design. Such prominence given to this medieval heraldic creature virtually assured the stamp's being pre-World War I.

It was that all right. The words LUBECK and POST-MARKE, appearing above and below the bird, indicated the stamp was even older than I had hoped.

Lubeck, once a free city-state on an arm of the Baltic, vanished from the international scene when it was gobbled up by Imperial Germany back in 1870.

I got a stamp catalogue from my car and found the orange item, a one schilling issue, was put out in 1859 and therefore was among the earliest German stamps.

When I showed it to Irv, he was pleased but not particularly impressed.

"I took that out of a lockset I fixed the other day for Jim Krauss. It was used as backing for a picture of his great grandmother, and I just forgot to put it back."

"But don't you realize this is valuable, man," I said. "Look. Unused, as this is, and gummed—which is that crackly stuff on the back—and with the floral watermark which you can see in the paper, this has a catalogue value of $80."

I asked Ned for the name of the catalogue he had used, and when he told me, I pulled three others from my shelf.

"You're lucky he didn't use one of these," I said, "because it would really have cost you money—a whole lot more."

The prices listed for an original 1827 quarter—as against a restrike—were $1,000, $2,000 and $2,500.

At first Ned found the news confusing, but when he learned strikes and originals combined, were coined in that year, he began to feel that the higher figures were nearer the true value.

"But what's the best way to sell it?" he asked.

I suggested that he put out a letter describing it and mail it to a substantial list of dealers and private collectors. He did that, selling the piece in a little less than two months for $1,250.

Hank took two books off his study shelf and handed them to me as carefully as if they had been printed by Gutenberg.

I looked down at the titles, expecting to see a couple of the rarer works of Brant Hartle or Mark Twain, but the authors' names I saw meant absolutely nothing to me. And there was no reason why they should. The title of the larger volume was "A Directory of the Ogdan City & Weber County." The other was "A Pocket Directory of Business Houses of Salt Lake City."

"How did you happen to find these?" I asked, trying to avoid saying anything that might hurt Hank's feelings.

"Well, Pink, there's a little hole-in-the-wall of a secondhand store right across from the Reno railroad station. And that's where I found them. They were sitting on a shelf among a lot

It's probably just one of United's DC-6 air coaches equipped with a new high-intensity lighting system which the air line is testing.

United Air Lines officials said the installation consists of seven photographic strobe lights arranged in a row on top and under the fuselage. The lights, visible more than 100 miles away, make
