'Merger Fever' Expected To Drop In Coming Year

New York — (U.P.) — The year 1955 went down as the most active period for mergers in a quarter-century, but economists expect the "merger fever" will drop in 1956.

According to the Federal Trade Commission, combinations in mining and manufacturing industries totaled more than 500 in 1955, the most since 799 recorded in 1930. The peak was 1,245 in 1929.

Economists say two factors probably will slow activity in 1956: (1) the fact that most likely candidates already have consolidated and (2) growing opposition from the Justice Department.

During 1955 a mad scramble for diversification sparked most unions. In a booming economy companies found mergers a good way to improve their competitive standings, pool resources or take advantage of special tax credit situations.

Old Names, New Products

In some cases strange bedfellows appeared. Childs Co., a restaurant chain, for example, invaded the shoe polish field; Philadelphia & Reading Corp., a coal producer, entered the underwear business; and ACF Brill Motors Co., a former bus builder, bought supermarkets.

Experts say 1956 will see more of this.

At the same time in 1955 there were many consolidations of companies with complementing production and distribution facilities. Heading this group was the merger of Remington Rand, Inc., and Sperry Corp. into the giant Sperry Rand Corp., an electronics manufacturer with $500,000,000 in assets.

As the merger fever rose in 1955 so did concern by the Justice Department. It was worried about a lessening of competition resulting from unions of big producers in the same field.

Legal Battles Loom

The year 1956 promises big legal battles on this subject. For example Bethlehem Steel Corp.'s Chairman Eugene G. Grace says he wants a court decision on the legality of his proposed merger with Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. The Justice Department announced opposition to this marriage last Spring.

First Sawmill Story . . .

The Rev. Samuel Parker arose before dawn on Oct. 16, 1835, and promptly awakened his two Indian companions. They were afloat in their frail canoe with the first streaks of light on the wide Columbia. Moving downstream from the Gorge, the three travelers found the way pleasant on unrippled water and in a gentle current. The cold, quiet air was alive with the strong scents of forest and stream and with the waking sounds of God's creatures.

Flying geese and ducks, swimming swans, and small birds on the north bank were choir and congregation for the parson's matins. The morning way seemed very good, bend by bend, hour by hour, for all its mid-October chill. Even a seal surfaced, to snort a greeting to the boatmen.

White men and their work appeared unexpectedly in the primeval scene. In the woods of the north bank two were spied by the missionary, "with yoke of oxen, drawing logs for sawing," from a heavy stand of giant "balsam firs." The Rev. Sam'l Parker gave hail and politely inquired the distance to Fort Vancouver. The bullwhacker bawled back, "Only seven miles around the point, down that prairie." "Thank you, sir," echoed from the preacher's big voice, as the Indians paddled on with the easy current.

Three-Saw Outfit . . .

Sam Parker, then 56 years old, was a preacher of the Congregational persuasion, enormously educated, a founder of Auburn Theological Seminary, a leading citizen of Ithaca—and he had been more than seven months in the Western wilderness with mountain men and Indians. He loved all men alike, red or white, sinners or saints. All things under God interested Parker, lumbermen and lumbering included.

So this unique missionary wrote the first report on the region's forest industry of the 1830s for the general public. This is a sample:

"Soon we came to a large sawmill, around which were tall piles of lumber and several cottages. This looked like business upon a more extensive scale than I had expected. I called a short time at this establishment, where I found several Scotch laborers belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company, with their Indian families. Although it was then about noon, they offered me a breakfast of peas and fish . . .

"Six miles up the Columbia (from Fort Vancouver), at the confluence of a stream coming from the northeast, the sawmill, with several saws, is kept in operation most of the year. This mill, though large, does not furnish more lumber than a common mill would, with one saw, in the United States.

"There being no pine below the Cascades, and but very little within 500 miles of the mouth of the Columbia river, the only timber sawed in this mill is fir and oak. Besides what lumber is used in the common business about this station, one, and sometimes two shiploads are sent annually to Oahu, Sandwich Islands and there it is called the pine of the northwest coast, and sells for about $50 the thousand feet. Spars and timber for shipping are also sent to that market . . ."

The Great Forest . . .

The scholarly missionary—he was highly praised for his scientific notes by Yale's famed Dr. Benjamin Silliman — enjoyed three fine trips between Fort Vancouver and Fort George (Astoria). The third was on the first run of the No. 1 steamboat on the Pacific, the great Beaver, in 1836. He wrote much about the riverside forests, as in this account of an excursion from Fort George:

"The storm being somewhat abated, on the 26th, Mr. Dunn, the superintendent of the fort, and myself, took our rifles to go back into the woods to hunt deer for exercise. But so dense was the forest, so filled and interwoven with various vines and shrubbery, that it was next to impossible to make any progress . . . We did not penetrate the woods more than a mile before we gave up the object, and turned our course back, but our return, with diligent efforts, occupied some hours . . ."

The Rev. Samuel Parker's business was to prepare the way for the Whitman-Spalding mission of 1836. He did this well. He also did some top-notch reporting.

Boyle Says Way Clear for Copco's 12-Year Program

Klamath Falls, Ore. — (U.P.)— John C. Boyle, vice- president and general manager of California Oregon Company, said that the way was clear for a $70,000,000 12-year Copco development program.

He said Interior Department approval of a 50-year contract with the company for continued operation of the Link river power and irrigation dam in Klamath county has enabled revised plans to go forward.

Must Obtain Licensing

Before work begins, Boyle said, licensing must be obtained from the Oregon State Hydroelectric commission as well as approval from California and Oregon state regulatory agencies and a contract filed with the Federal Power commission.

Formal application will be presented to the FPC as soon as the contract is signed, Boyle said. He added that approval protects present and future irrigation water for the Klamath basin and northern California.

To Combine Dams

"Because of delay, Copco has decided to combine Big Bend No. 1 and Big Bend No. 2 power dams in Klamath county and increase the output from 50,000 to 80,000 kilowatts," Boyle said. Work is expected to begin on Big Bend in the summer of 1956, with completion scheduled for 1959.

The overall program would provide 580,000 acre feet of water storage at Aspen lake and Round lake, Boyle said.
