Royal Circle Gossip Says Margaret May Be Spinster

By ROBERT MUSEL
United Press Correspondent

London — (UP) — There's a gloomy word beginning to crop up in gossip in royal circles about Princess Margaret and word is: "Spinster."

If the nation could have made a unanimous New Year's wish it probably would have been that the 25-year-old sister of Queen Elizabeth might find a mate and marital happiness in 1956.

But 50 million Britons probably will be disappointed. For many of the members and graduates of what used to be called "the Princess Margaret set" are beginning to believe the pretty little princess may never marry at all. And this school of thought includes quite a few knowledgeable courtiers as well.

Shed no tears over the breakup with Group Capt. Peter Townsend. The princess never intended to marry him. Her final dramatic statement of renunciation was exactly what her friends expected from a girl who would have been an actress if she hadn't been royally born. No Townsend Ghost

No, it won't be the ghost of the Townsend episode that will keep the princess single — if she does remain single.

It will be simply that she expects a great deal from her dream man and dream men are in very short supply these days. Especially those who are tall, dren.

good looking, rich, love dancing and the theater and will feel right at home with her family.

Not everyone can feel cozy with in-laws when those in-laws include queens, princesses and princes and the setting is a palace or a castle.

Also the princess insists on marrying for love. Ladies as highborn as she is never have much of a choice of mates. When they make true love a condition, that narrows the field to the vanishing point. So the princess has grown older alone while the men she should have married are busy raising families.

Few Remain
There are only four or five youngish men left in Britain who qualify as top "eligibles" and no sign the princess is taken with any of them. But she may yet find the man she is seeking elsewhere. The commonwealth, perhaps.

So 1956 will see the princess making more frequent overseas trips, maybe even to the United States.

When I mentioned the talk about spinsterhood to a royal source, he said: "Life for a royal spinster isn't as bleak as it might be for other people, you know. Princess Victoria, sister of George V, had a very full and happy life. There is always work of importance for them to do." But it seems a chilly trade for a husband and love and chil-

Dance Clubs Give New Year Party

Merry-Go-Rounders and Swingin' Bees square dance clubs held a New Year's eve party, attended by a capacity crowd of dancers from Jackson and Josephine counties. Mrs. Paul Graham of Grants Pass was master of ceremonies. Six other valley callers assisted calling a varied program of squares and round dances.

The punch and hors d'oeuvres table was attractively decorated in blue and white. At midnight caps, noise makers and serpentine were distributed to herald the New Year's arrival and later a smorgasbord supper was served.

The committee workers from the two clubs in charge of the party were Mrs. Walter Jensen, Mrs. Johnnie Johnson, Mrs. Frank Denham, Mrs. Alice Forbes, Don Sellers, Mr. Nash and Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Robertson.
