As We Live

By ELIZABETH HURLOCK, P.H.D.

Height Difference Is Relatively Unimportant

No one can tell for certain what a growing child's ultimate size will be. However, when the person reaches middle teens, it is possible to predict with a fair degree of accuracy how big that person will be.

(Q) "I am going with a fellow who is very good looking. You couldn't want a nicer person than he is. The only trouble is his size. He is about 3 inches shorter than I am. He is 16 years old and very mature for his age and has been for quite some time. He has a brother of 14 who is taller. His mother is short but his father is tall. This boy is about five feet three inches and I am five feet six inches tall. I would like to know if there is any chance of his getting taller. I am quite self-conscious about our heights when we are together." J.R.

(A) There is, of course, a chance this boy will eventually be taller than he now is. You do not say how old you are but I assume you are about the same age. If this is true, then there is also the chance you will be even taller than you are now. You finish growing. When you referred to the fact that this boy is "very mature" for his age, I assume that you meant physically mature as well as mature in behavior. As a matter of fact, the two usually go hand in hand, with behavior maturity sometimes lagging behind physical maturity.

Because this boy has been very mature for quite some time, it suggests that he is just about finished growing. True, he may grow an inch or two in height, but that is about the limit. Growth in height precedes maturity of the body and comes to a standstill sooner than other body changes.

It looks to me as if this boy is "taking after" his mother while the brother is "taking after" the father. That is why the younger boy is taller than the older in spite of the differences in their ages.

As this boy is good looking and has other traits you like, you are foolish to allow the matter of difference in your height to come between you. When you are with him, wear flats and fix your hair to make you look shorter than you are. Then forget about the difference in your heights or you will make him so self-conscious that he will not want to go out with you.

Dr. Hurlock

Amnesia Victim, Bride To Go Home

San Francisco—(U.P.)—Ronald Evenson, 27, and his pretty bride prepared to fly home to Colorado today, both at a loss to account for an attack of amnesia that blotted out the memory of his romance and marriage.

Evenson and his bride, Delora Lee, 24, left Placerville, Calif., Sanitarium yesterday and drove their rented car back to San Francisco. After spending the night here, they were to leave for Denver.

Evenson, a senior at the Colorado School of Mines, vanished from their honeymoon suite at San Francisco's Fairmont Hotel early Monday. He was found Tuesday night lying on a snow-covered mountain highway near Placerville.

For many hours, he was unable to remember who he was. He failed to recognize his bride when she went to his bedside. Finally, Dr. L. E. Shortes gave him a shot of "truth serum," which gradually brought back his memory.

"We're very relieved and happy that he has recovered," said Mrs. Evenson, radiantly happy as they left the sanitarium.

Dr. Shortes said the couple was "prety confused about the whole thing. They can't figure out any reason for it."

Evenson and his wife met last June while attending summer classes at University of Colorado. They married a week ago Wednesday in La Junta, Colo., and came to San Francisco the next day. Mrs. Evenson teaches school at Sterling, Colo.
