

They'll Do It Every Time

By Jimmy Hatlo

OCTOBER
RUTLEY, THE DRUG SUPPLY DRUMMER, GETS THIS REFRAIN WHEN HE TRIES TO PEDdle HIS WINTER WARES....

COUGH SYRUP? NOSE DROPS? NO, NO, I DON'T NEED THAT STUFF! IT'S TOO EARLY! WINTER IS A LONG TIME AWAY YET!!

JANUARY
...SO HE RETURNS WHEN THE WEATHER IS COLDER THAN A PENGUIN'S PANTS, AND GETS THIS....

COUGH SYRUP? COLD TABLETS? NOSE DROPS? NO, NO, YOU'RE TOO LATE! THE WINTER IS JUST ABOUT OVER! WHY, IT'S ALMOST SUMMER!

THANK AND A TIP OF THE HAT TO THE HATCOLOUTT CHICKAMUCK ROAD SHEPHERD PENN.

'FRONTIER MARSHAL' ROBBED—Hugh O'Brian, who plays Frontier Marshal Wyatt Earp on television, reprimands his dog Lady who was present but gave no warning when burglars stole $3500 in costumes, jewelry and tape recording equipment from the actor's Hollywood home. As a final insult, the ornery varmints stole both of Marshal Earp's gold-plated badges.

OUT OF THE WOODS

JIM STEVENS

Hoover Program 1920 . . .

The lumber leaders who introduced engineering methods into lumber manufacturing and modern merchandising into lumber selling brought benefits to the rank and file of the lumber trade from 1900 onwards.

Lumbermen with vision were also the prime movers in the organization of lumber trade associations on both the manufacturing and the retail side and in which the smallest businessmen in the trade could find voice.

These associations gave strong service in the coordination of industry units with the government agencies as early as World War I. They served the same way after the war, when the then Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover started his project of standards for major American products.

The lumber industry had by then come a long way in setting up its own American lumber standards so that dealers, specifiers and consumers would have nationally accepted yardsticks for use in evaluating the many lumber species, particularly in the midwest and eastern markets.

Mr. Hoover's over-all standardization program covered, of course, all sorts of materials and patterns outside lumber. There were axes, for example. The patterns long used by axe manufacturers were reduced by half in number. Hundreds of similar efforts combined to make the whole Herculean labor of product standards one of the greatest services ever rendered the American economy by a government agency.

Lumber Trade Integrity . . .

Progress in lumber trade standards continued to a point at World War II which promised that every piece of lumber sold to the American consumer should bear a grademark stamp. The war called a halt to lumber grademarking. Now it is in restoration.

Today the grading bureaus of the regional lumber manufacturing industries hold first importance among all the organizations of the lumber trade. These bureaus are in fact the only organizations within the trade that are regarded as indispensable by every lumberman.

The published "Grading Rules" of the West Coast Lumbermen's Association, the Western Pine Association and the 15 other regional members of the National Lumber Manufacturers Association, are the sales catalogs of these regional lumber manufacturing organizations.

From any one of the regional books of widely graded rules, buyers as widely separated as Bee Harbor, Miami and San Diego may order identical items and grades from three widely separated sawmills in a given lumber producing region, and they will receive essentially the same material from all three sources of supply.

New Lumber Grades . . .

The lumber industry's work in World War II supply was featured by the most complex and difficult specifications. Aircraft lumber, for example, had to pass rigid inspections and exacting tests from sawmill to place of use.

The West Coast lumber industry was able to meet such technical demands because of the great growth of the lumber trade in merchandising through standardization grades, highly developed grade inspection service, and through advanced timber engineering progress. These ways of progress are being persistently improved.

Grade standards are basic in all lumber transactions. Grades are the vital mechanism of the modern lumber business. Lumber grade standards are as essential to peacetime construction as they were to the war effort. These standards are being studied and tested as never before. Herbert Hoover's early efforts remain a vital source of all this growth and change for the better.
