265-Foot Dam OKd For John Day Project

Washington—(U.P.)—Acting on protests by residents along the Columbia river, the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors yesterday approved a 265-foot instead of a 292-foot high dam for the proposed John Day project.

Complaints had been received that a high dam would result in valuable industrial and other property being inundated.

The lower dam also would cost about 40 million dollars less than that originally planned, or some $10 million dollars.

The high dam would inundate towns of Arlington, Boardman and Irrigon in Oregon and Paterson, Alderdale and Plymouth in Washington. The town of Roosevelt, Wash., faces inundation by the low-level dam.

Douglas County Forms Flood Warning System

Roseburg—(U.P.)—A group of flood-weary Douglas county residents announced today they have formed a flood warning system utilizing facilities of the weather bureau, civil defense agency and communications media.

They said they formed the warning system as a protection of life and property in the Umpqua river basin in the event of a recurrence of the high water that swept the county in December.

Organizers were Brig. Gen. J. P. Pierce, head of the Douglas County Civil Defense agency; Mark Lander of the Roseburg office of the weather bureau, and Del McKay of Radio Station KRXL.
