Rounded Farm Aid Program Supported By Sen. Neuberger

Washington, D. C.—(Special)—Sen. Richard L. Neuberger (D-Ore.) this week urged consideration of a national farm program providing "consideration and fairness to all farmers irrespective of whether they raise basic commodities or not."

Testifying before the Senate committee on agriculture and forestry, which is now holding hearings on proposed farm legislation, the Oregon senator declared that "many, many farm families now facing real economic plight, at least in a diversified agricultural economy such as Oregon's, are completely outside any federal program of economic aid."

No Single Method

"Obviously, no single method of government assistance, which may solve specific problems of one group of farmers will be a panacea for all farmers," he said. "In medicine, we have long since given up bleeding every patient as the standard cure for whatever ails him; we should not permit the same single-minded approach in our treatment of our sick farm economy."

"The great government price support and surplus disposal programs for the so-called basic crops do not reach thousands of farm families in states like Oregon, who grow berries or carrots or raise chickens and turkeys. Recognition of a very broad crisis in agriculture, which cuts across many crops, many areas, many types of agricultural production, points the way to the kind of approach which we in Congress should take towards new federal farm policies. This is an opportune moment for experiment, for initiating new programs which are not known in advance to be fool-proof but which deserve a trial."

Other Proposals

He mentioned the acreage reserve and conservation reserve proposals as possibilities for experimentation aimed at "what is obviously not one farm problem, but many farm problems."

"Surplus capacity must cease to be considered a national liability," he added. "Our surplus agricultural capacity must come to be viewed as a mighty asset and be treated as such. The day we find that we can produce no surplus food in this country, that day, all too late, we will know we have tragically become one of the have-not countries of the world."

The candidates for the eight-year award include Ruth and Eva Goble, Marvin Smith, Gerry and Janet Bohl, Mrs. Orpha Leschensky, Mrs. Mary Foster, and Harold Huebner.

Insurance Lowered For Women Drivers

Portland — (U.P.) — The girls have won their point. Auto insurance underwriters announced today they would no longer penalize car owners who allow women, under 25 to operate their vehicles.

Removal of extra premiums for women drivers under 25 was announced by the National Bureau of Casualty Underwriters and the National Automobile Underwriters association. The change would be effective in Oregon Feb. 1.

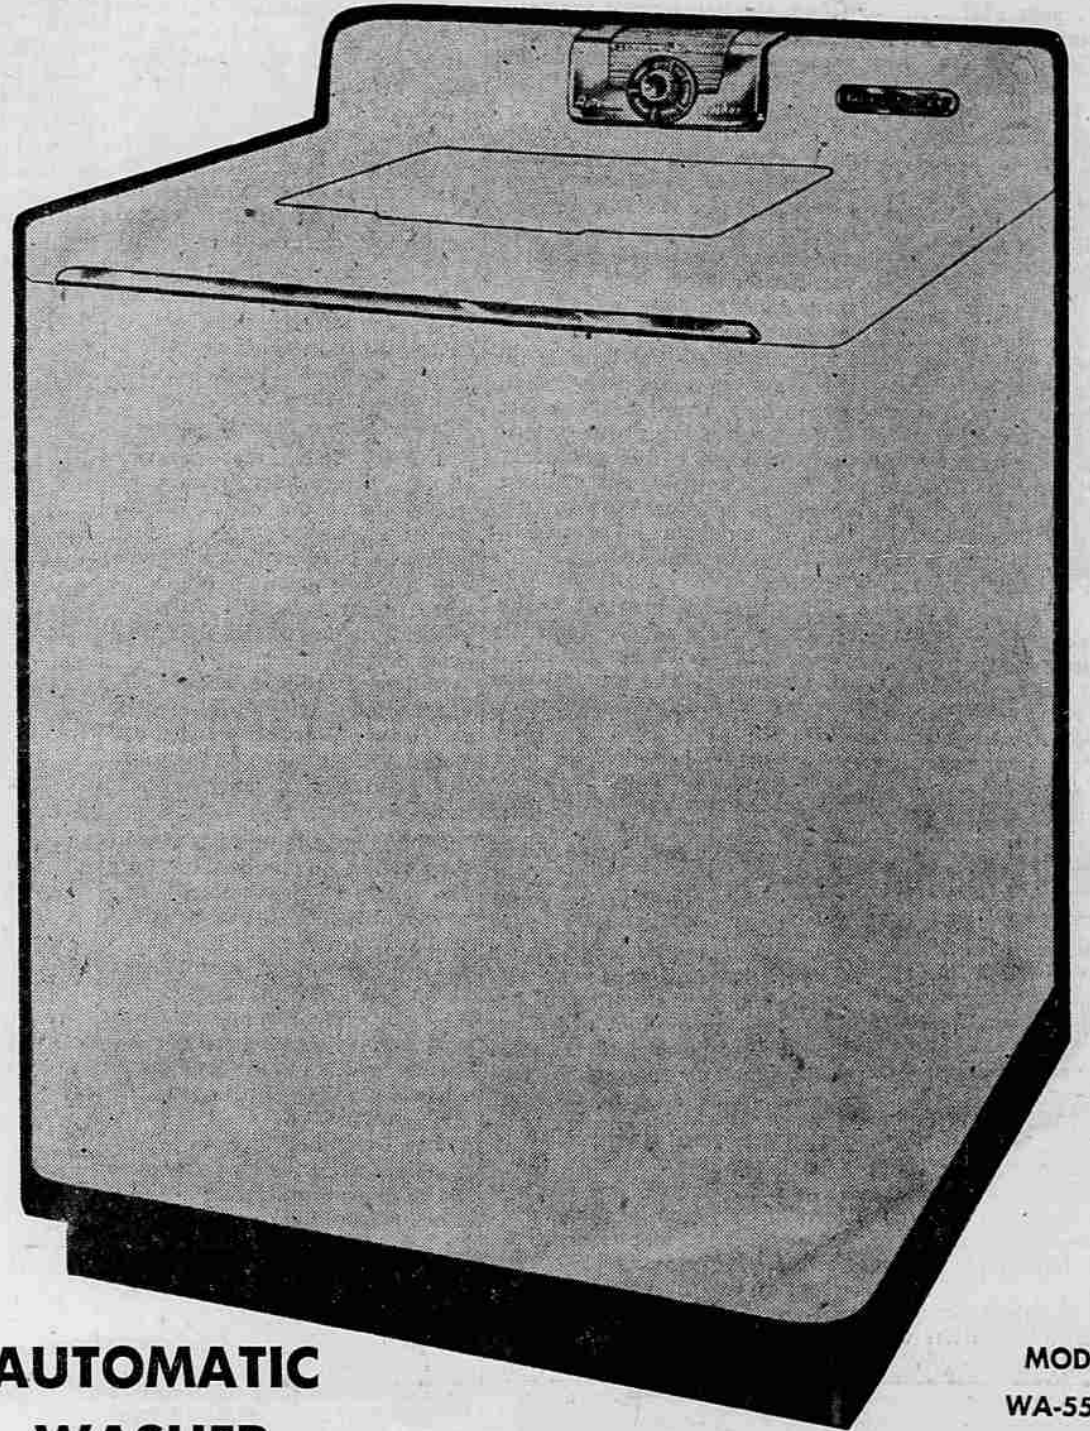

Member companies said the premium reduction was the result of good driving records by younger women. Several independent companies have already removed the extra premium but those charged against cars driven by men under 25 will remain.
