

Science Study Shows Alcoholics Lacking Interest in Sex Life

By DELOS SMITH
United Press Science Editor
New York — (UP) — The first scientific study of the sexual behavior of the human alcoholic reveals that they are as much mixed up in this field as in any other.

Dr. Jacob Levine, associate clinical professor of psychiatry, Yale university, found that they didn't have much sex life, generally speaking.

By and large, he reported, male alcoholics were unresponsive to women and were not attracted to them, and female alcoholics were unresponsive and not attracted by men.

"It was also found," he said, "that a large proportion of the male alcoholics came from homes with an overpowering and controlling mother, upon whom they were greatly dependent, and a passive and distant father toward whom they felt hostile."

Unlike Dr. Kinsey's celebrated studies of male and female sex lives, Dr. Levine's study of alcoholic sex lives was statistical rather incidentally. Instead it was based on the medical records of alcoholics sufficiently advanced to require treatment. These records were of 79 alcoholics who came to the attention of the Connecticut State Commission on Alcoholism.

Low Alcoholic Frequency
Of these 79, 63 were men and 16 were women and they ranged in age from 22 to 51. Using the word which Kinsey popularized, "frequency," Dr. Levine found that the usual alcoholic frequency was extremely low. But "even more convincing were the attitudes expressed by these subjects toward sex," he said. Generally, these attitudes were flatly negative.

He noted that many people think alcohol increases the sex drive, but without having any evidence that it does. He was struck by the fact that 70 per cent of his male alcoholics preferred the society of other males and "the female alcoholics seem to be either afraid of or hostile to men."

In some relatively few cases, alcohol did seem to increase the sex drive, he found, but at the same time it reduced sexual capability. Of the 16 women, five were promiscuous yet all five were basically unresponsive. Eight of the 16 shunned men.

"Aside from the immediate effects of alcohol, there is the problem of the influence of its long-continued excessive use upon sexual behavior," he said in his report to Yale's Center of Studies on Alcohol. "But the most important assumption in this connection is that one of the primary motivations for alcohol addiction arises out of deeply rooted sexual conflicts."

The results of his studies were

Local Men Plan To Attend Short Course

Ray Hubbell, Jackson county weed supervisor, and L. A. Perry, in charge of county spray rigs, will be in Corvallis Jan. 30-31 and Feb. 1 for the fifth annual short course for region agricultural sprayers and dusters. Others from this area are expected to attend.

Between 300 and 400 ground and air operators will attend the course, which was planned by the state department of agriculture in cooperation with Oregon State college.

Speakers will include John Neace, Phoenix, Ariz., who will talk on public relations; R. E. Dake, chief of general safety with the Civil Aeronautics Authority, Los Angeles; and Charles Branstetter, Sacramento, who will discuss the importance of state agricultural aviation associations.

New state legislation affecting operators will be developed by Frank McKennon, plant division chief of the Oregon department of agriculture, and federal legislation will be discussed by a panel moderated by Dr. Paul O. Ritcher, OSC. A second panel of OSC specialists will discuss recent developments in agricultural chemicals. Separate sessions for ground and air operators will be held. Ray Kelso, department of agriculture, will supervise applicators' state examinations.

"consistent" with psycho-analytic findings regarding these "deeply rooted sexual conflicts." These findings are "that the alcoholic has a basic homosexual problem. Addiction to alcohol is presumed to be one way of dealing with this conflict, which is largely unconscious," he continued.

"Thus it may be that in the alcoholic diminished interest in the opposite sex springs from a drive for relations with a partner of the same sex. This, of course, cannot be gratified or even tolerated, and is therefore repressed."

As We Live

New Husband Poses Problems for Friends

In friendships, as in all other human relations, a person can go just so far and no further.

(Q) "I have a friend whom I have known ever since we were girls. I always looked upon her as one of my best friends. She was a person I could always count on in an emergency, as when one of my children was sick or when my mother died. Her husband died two years ago and she remarried several months ago. We have always visited back and forth at each others' homes and our children have always played together. Her new husband does not seem to understand children and speaks sharply to her children and to mine. Now we are not invited to come to her home anymore and she always has an excuse when I ask her to come to my home. What can I do? I don't want to lose her friendship?" Mrs. R.G.

(A) You have done all you can do except, perhaps, asking her what is the matter. It should be fairly obvious to you that your friend's new husband does not want her to keep up her friendship with you, for some reason or other.

If you asked her to come to your home during the day, while her husband is at work, you and she might be able to keep up your friendship, even if your husbands are not around. If she is a true friend, she will not want to give up her friendship with you, even if her husband does not enjoy being with you and your family.

Wants To Avoid Friction
You must realize that your friend naturally wants to do things to make her new husband happy and to avoid friction in the home. If he does not like or understand children, your friend doubtless has plenty of problems at home without adding to them by visiting with people who also have children. The new husband may not want the confusion of a visit where there are children.

You cannot go all the way, even with an old and trusted friend. If your friend must choose between her friendship with you and peace at home with her new husband, it is obvious what her choice will be. Nothing you can do will change her decision in this matter.

During the past five years, the $10,000-and-up income group has grown by 90 per cent. This class, which is economically important, includes the upper middle class, the well-to-do and the so-called rich. But it represents only 7 per cent of the total number of families in the country.

EAGLE POINT India Missionaries Return

By PEARL L. HENDERSON
By Mrs. Pearl L. Henderson
Eagle Point—Mr. and Mrs. Elko Redding and children recently returned on furlough from near Bombay, India, where they had been in missionary work for the past six years. While there they established six native schools in jungle villages. Mr. Redding is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Redding, now of Medford, who were former residents of Eagle Point.

They will put in their year of furlough in doing deputation work and plan to return to India at the end of that time, if they are called.

Mrs. Redding and her mother-in-law attended the missionary society meeting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. Munshaw Wednesday, Jan. 18, and will be at the Community church soon to give an account of their work, and experiences or six years. The date for this meeting will be announced soon. They are staying with Elko's parents in Medford at present.

Percy Haley, Eagle Point, who underwent an appendectomy at Sacred Heart hospital last Tuesday morning, is reported to be doing as well as can be expected at this time.

Mr. and Mrs. Otho Gosnell, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Preston of Roseburg, were callers on Mr. and Mrs. Orvil Henderson Sunday, Jan. 15. Cpl. Boyd Dunford, son of Mrs. Mildred Dunford of this place, received his discharge from the army at Inchon, Korea, and returned to his home Jan. 7. Rain is the main topic of conversation nowadays, but we still have many robins, meadow larks, bluejays and other birds around, chirping and singing, which makes us feel that maybe it isn't too bad after all and we have a great deal to be thankful for. We aren't being flooded out of our homes, at least.

The average American is eating 16 per cent more fat than he did 40 years ago.
