Norblad To Seek Ban on High Speeds

Washington — (U.P.) — Rep. Walter Norblad (R-Ore.), said today he would try to get Congress to pass a law making it impossible to drive a car faster than 70 miles an hour.

He said he was "exploring every legal means" to get the federal government to prohibit the manufacture of automobiles capable of speeds higher than 70 miles an hour or to require governors on all cars limiting them to that top speed.

Norblad caustically criticized automobile manufacturers for their disregard of safety in their new cars.

"I attended the automobile show in Washington last week," he said in a statement, "and was shocked to see the emphasis, the sales talk, and the advertising was all on the greater speed and horsepower of the new automobiles."

R. Darrohn Innocent On Larceny Charge

Robert Darrohn was found innocent of larceny of livestock in a trial last year, rather than guilty, as was stated incorrectly and was the result of an inadvertent mistake in Sunday's Mail Tribune.

The error came about when the phrase "not guilty" was used, and the word "not" was omitted. The Mail Tribune regrets the error, and expresses its apologies to those concerned. The mistake occurred in a story about activities of the district attorney's office during the year 1955.

OUT OF THE WOODS

Holbrook's River . . .
The most learned and sagacious writer of books in the early days of white men on the Columbia river was the Congregational missionary, Sam Parker, who ranged up and down the region in 1835-1836. He had a scholar's eye for the timber, from Fort Okanogan to Astoria. But he promised his readers, "I do not here intend to enter upon the dendrology of this country."

Stewart Holbrook owns the sagacity of a Rev. Parker and he has a head full of the dendrology and economic history of the region's forests. Best of all, through his 35 years of ranging the lands of the Columbia and its prominent tributaries he has gathered in a great treasure of tales, mainly the true but legends too. When he goes to recite a chapter of history he says, in effect, "Now once there was a man, and this is what he did." Sometimes, "And there were women."

The Holbrook "Columbia" is the 50th in the Reinhart "Rivers of America" series. It began many years ago with a book on the Housatonic. The Oregon author knew this and other New England rivers of the series when he was a boy. And he was bred on Bryant, whose famous poem, "Thanatopsis," written in 1811, carried the line, "The continuous woods where rolls the Oregon, and hears no sound, save his own dashings." These woods are seldom out of sight in the new book about the Columbia.

Simon Benson . . .
At the start of Chapter 11 the narrator remarks, "It is time to mention that for a century past the base of major activity along the Columbia and many of its tributaries has been timber. Timber is king here." Truer word was never said with finer restraint. Holbrook nails it down with the story of Simon Benson.

Benson was a Columbia logger who saw giant promise in the Southern California market for West Coast lumber. He built a sawmill on San Diego Bay and began to ship his logs there on coasting schooners. But the costs were high. Then:

"In the quiet of Wallace Slough on the lower Columbia, they built a great cradle, filled it with 3,000,000 feet of logs, hitched on a powerful tug, and started. In 20 days the rig made the 1,100-mile voyage without trouble. This was it. More than 100 other rafts followed in her wake, and the Benson mill in Southern California was perhaps the only one in North America to saw lumber from logs grown in a forest 1,100 miles away."

So the timber chapter runs, with blazing pages of forest-fire history, the saga of the Wobblies in the woods, lore of the pine camps, the Skidroads of Spokane and Portland. The chapter closes with a rousing poem on daybreak in the old-time Columbia river logging

A British journalist says the Princess Margaret is never referred to as "Meg" in England. That calling her that "originated in America where it is a popular practice to refer to girls named Margaret as "Meg." I question the gentleman's statement. I have known innumerable American girls named Margaret but the only one I ever heard called "Meg" was Meg Mundy, the model and actress. By the way, what became of Miss Mundy?

Brooklyn is the birthplace of more film stars than any other city in the world. Never in motion picture history has there been a period when there were not at least three Brooklyn girls who were outstanding stars. The first Brooklyn girl to become a film star was Florence Turner. That was around 1907.

Guide to Gals
When a Pisces (February 21-March 20) woman is irritated by her husband, she weeps. A Leo (July 24-August 22) wife of the Libra (September 24-October 23) wife makes sarcastic and insulting remarks. So does the Scorpio (October 24-November 22) spouse. Only more so. The Scorpion females also throw things at their mates. When a Sagittarian's (November 23-December 22) husband angers her, she reminds him of things he would like to forget and makes references to his weaknesses. Or, so say the stargazers.

Portland Police Nab Young Thugs

Portland — (U.P.) — Portland police, in the midst of a "thug busting" crackdown, nabbed four youths over the week end and were searching for a man who tried to hold up the Metropolitan branch of the U. S. National bank Saturday by threatening to blow up the cashier with a bottle of nitroglycerin.

Three of four Portland youths were charged with armed robbery early yesterday and held in lieu of $10,000 bail after two southeast stores were held up Saturday evening.

The fourth, a 16-year-old, was turned over to juvenile authorities. The three charged were identified as Richard Donald Scarborough, 20; Jonathan Olney, 21, and Raymond Gus Smith, 19, all of Portland.

The bank robbery attempt was foiled by assistant manager R. V. Runyon who calmly dialed police as the would-be robber threatened to blow him up with nitroglycerine.

Runyon said the bandit "didn't look desperate enough." He fled when Runyon refused to return the note he had shoved at him demanding money.
