Shocking, Schiaparelli Bring To Mind Beautifully Vivid Pink To Miss Swanson

By GLORIA SWANSON
Written for UNITED PRESS
Rome—"Shocking" and Schiaparelli are two words which bring to mind a beautifully vivid pink, a lovely scent and a dynamo of a person who lets off sparks in the form of new ideas. No longer is Schiaparelli a couturier confined to apparel, but a company known in France as "Signed Schiaparelli."

The ideas are not only for milady, but also now for gentlemen as well. For them she recently invented a drink called "shock rocks" (pink vodka on ice). This isn't a joke. I have seen it in her home in Paris.

And speaking of her home, here is a house unlike any other on this earth! It could easily be a museum.

Home Cluttered
To describe it in detail, I'd need an entire newspaper. Besides, it must be seen to be believed. If I tell you it is cluttered, that is putting it mildly. I thought I saved things that doesn't mean we are collectors—it means we never throw anything away.

Well, my recollection of a maze of "things" was a collection of horns. Not musical horns, animal horns! All sizes and shapes. Oh yes, and some very long elephant tusks.

I can't tell you what period the furniture was because I don't remember seeing it. The couch I sat on was covered with a leopard skin throw. The cocktail table was littered with bottles and glasses. Every other table and the piano had "objects of art" and bric-a-brac mementoes without an inch to spare because of the porcelain horns, crystal works of art horns and paintings, many of which rest on chairs that need repair—and more horns! Has Passion for Unusual

This woman's passion for the unusual in the old as well as the new was certainly in evidence. I don't imagine there is a duplicate to be found in the whole world of anything in her petite salon, or was it a library? There were books but I seem to recall they were on the floor.

Her clothes collections when she had her couturier business in Paris were always unlike the French designers. It was she who started the padded shoulders that were in vogue longer than any style I can remember.

Before we parted this week

Schiaparelli graciously invited me to stay with her in Paris, which I accepted promptly. All the horns pointed directly at my heart would not stop me from seeing what is on the second floor.

STIFF BOOK PENALTY

Grand Rapids, Mich.—(U.P.)—Grand Rapids' new ordinance making persons who fail to return books to the public library liable to $50 fines or 30 days in jail is bringing results, library officials said. Scores of "lost" books have been returned to the library since the ordinance was adopted late last year.

OUT OF THE WOODS
JIM STEVENS

Tail Timber Tales
A new book of history and tales out of the wilderness of the Olympic Peninsula promises to rival "The Egg and I," a story-book from the same region.
Betty McDonald, who wrote the hen-fruit saga of diversified stump-ranching more years ago than she would like to have mentioned, now ranks among the top ten-story tellers of the U.S.A.
Young Murray Morgan's fifth book is "Last Wilderness." He spun yarns rarely well in his "Skid Road," out of Seattle history. In his Olympic Peninsula book he strides upward and on.
Of course, he serves up the classics about Jim Huesel, the Iron Man of the Hoh, Wild Man Turnover of the South Olympics, and other figures of fact and legend. But they have been freshened, so that they read like new. The last chapter, on Destruction Island, on the other had, is so new in material and treatment that it was recently published in The Saturday Evening Post, as "The Loneliest Spot in America."
The Famous Elk Hunt
And now in a book we have the modern story on how old-time log piracy is today up against the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Morgan cites the case of an Olympic National Forest ranger, who located evidence that a couple of giant logs in a small boom had been pirated from Uncle's timber. He tracked truck trails to the scene of the crime, then took an FBI agent to the stumps. They sawed the tops off, then hauled the cuts to the boom and matched them with the butt ends of the logs in question. It cost the pirate $5,000, all told, to get out of that one.
Ever hear stories from the wide-open season on the Olympic Elk that was declared in 1937? Murray Morgan tells the best ones in "Last Wilderness." There were 5,280 hunters who swarmed into Olympic National forest and over industry and state timberlands. It cost them an estimated $250,000 (1937 dollars) to kill 811 elk. Murray Morgan repeats this story, as told to him by one stump-rancher about another:

"You see, he had a cow—old, sick cow... And when the season opened he took the poor old critter out in the woods and tied her to a stake... Pretty soon—bang! But she didn't suffer at all. That hunter was a good shot. Right smack between the eyes. Fellow from Seattle, and pretty rich. He paid $135 right there, and he wrote out a check for $200... They propped that poor damn cow up and got her leaning against a tree, and that week she earned him $1,425.37, three rifles, a spare tire off a pickup truck, and she had twelve elk tags on her. After the season he melted her down for lead."
The Tree Farms Story
Murray Morgan reports history, also, in his new book. One chapter is on the birth of tree farms in Grays Harbor county, year of 1941, and how this program looks today in neighboring Mason county. The chapter strides out with this line:
"The first lumber was cut in Mason county in 1853... the first lumberman in Mason county was Mike Simmons, the big, unlettered Kentucky pioneer who has led the first American settlers to the Puget Sound country eight years earlier."
The toil, the struggle, the rivalries, the ventures with risk capital, the losses, the gains, the investment of gains in new plants for new products, so that today good wood is hauled down and utilized to the last splinter—all this is recorded in "The Last Wilderness" as facts of history simply and entertainingly dramatized. Murray Morgan emerges from his new book as a well-informed and highly reliable forestry writer.
