Carvings of Hardwood By Skilled Artists

As a general rule it is wise to buy any piece of wood carving that is offered at a low price, especially if the wood is hard and heavy.

A good part of the reason is that usually only skillful artists work in such material and therefore the workmanship tends to be good no matter how true the subject matter may be. Such a combination means a greater likelihood of a good price, particularly if the piece is shown to a sizable number of people.

Last year the widow of a friend of mine decided to sell the greater part of her furnishings before moving into smaller quarters. Among the pieces was a teak statue of a sixteenth century Spanish soldier leaning on a pike. It was a well executed piece of work, but nothing really extraordinary, quite typical, in fact, of those found in a certain class of homes of the 1890-1910 era.

I recalled the piece immediately on seeing it. I had been with her husband when he had found it some ten years before. He had come across it as it lay under a table in a salvage shop, and even though the head of the pike had been broken off, he had been glad to pay $7.50 for the piece which stood under three feet high.

When auctioned, the piece went quickly with three people bidding it up to a price of $120 and the auctioneer even then complaining that the buyer was getting too much of a bargain.

But only last month I came across the piece again. This time it was pictured in a catalogue, and the price at which the dealer had listed it had gone up again—to $275.

STATES TOOK MEASURES TO HAMPER STAMP THIEVES

Stamp collectors owe something of a debt to a choice collection of characters including such pleasant people as "Baby Face" Nelson, Dillinger and various other prominent hoods of the Middle West at the end of the roaring twenties.

The reason is that by 1929 losses in post office robberies and burglaries in that section of the country—especially Kansas and Nebraska—had reached such proportions that the post office department felt it had better take fast action on its own rather than continue to rely exclusively on the FBI and local police.

The type of action taken was protective, of course, designed simply to cut losses, not to capture criminals.

It consisted of overprinting the abbreviations "Kans." and "Nebr." on regular stamps of the 1926-1927 series.

The reason was that any criminal who made off with substantial quantities of those stamps would be unable to dispose of them in any other state. The stamps would be good anywhere in the country, but if a business house in Chicago or New York suddenly began to use large quantities of stamps with a Kansas or Nebraska overprint, it would be quickly evident that the stamps had been bought at a discount as stolen goods.

The idea proved to be astonishingly successful insofar as the theft of stamps was concerned. It had to be an extremely dumb thief not to appreciate the potentialities of the situation, and most of them switched their attention to currency exclusively with the result that though the post office gained, the banks suffered. In any event, it was unnecessary for the government to repeat the overprinting the next year.

The effect for collectors is that any stamp of the series—there are 11 up to the 10 cent denomination—has a substantial premium.

Most valuable is a pair of 3-cent, violet stamps, one of them overprinted "Kans." or "Nebr." and the other plain. It is catalogued at $100 unused. Cancelled, it would be worth much more.

VALUE OF CHAIR OBSCURED BY STEER HORN ADORNMENT

No matter how often I looked at it, the chair seemed to be nothing other than a Victorian atrocity. It was the horns that did it. I am positive of that. They dominated the piece not only physically but spiritually, too, if you can imagine such a thing about a piece of otherwise inanimate furniture.

The horns were rather small ones as those of Texas longhorns go. Just a little over six feet from tip to tip, not quite half the length of the biggest ones on record. But they had been reshaped—a process of soaking and heating—so that in place of the multiple curves they now had only one, a graceful arc sweeping out and away from the back of the chair to end three or four inches beyond the front edge of the seat.

But though most people who saw the chair—priced at $65, by the way—saw primarily the horns, it wasn't so with Charles, a long-standing acquaintance of mine. He paid as much attention to the feet and the rest of the piece. More, in fact, so much I have felt he was putting on an act if I hadn't known him better and if he hadn't bought it.

That, of course, was the payoff. Charles never buys anything unless he is absolutely certain his money's worth. He had seen something in the chair the rest of us hadn't seen.

"This is an old corner chair," he said when I asked why he had bought it. "Just try to picture it without those horns. With the graceful arms it originally had. From the positioning of the four legs with their ball and claw feet you can see it was meant to sit right in a corner."

"It was probably made in the latter part of the 1700's, and it certainly wasn't made to go with the horns. Obviously, it was already old when they were put on."

I could see he was going to remove the horns and restore the piece. He felt he could get maybe $400 or $500 for it.

But the job never got done. Someone liked the horns on it and paid him $300 for the piece as it was.
