Doctor Freed in Mercy Killing Six Years Ago Now Enjoys Thriving Practice

By H. D. QUIGG United Press Correspondent Manchester, N. H.—(U.P.)—The sign on the frosted door said "H. N. Sander, M.D."

On the wall just beside the office door was a small hand-lettered sign: "Please leave your boots and rubbers out in the hall. Thank you"

Outside the building, on the sidewalks of the main thoroughfare of this factory city, a man said: "He's got more patients than

He ever had. And even before his trouble he always had big practice."

Then he paused, looked up, and said: "I don't want any publicity."

He lives in the village of Candia, N.H., 10 miles from Manchester. What with home calls after office hours, this work just doesn't end.

Did he find time to do much skiing nowadays? "I'm teaching my kids to ski now, that's about all," he said, smiling.

As for hospital work, he said: "I do a little operating, at Exeter."

Exeter, N.H., is in Rockingham county, where Dr. Sander has been admitted to membership in the medical society. Although he has been reinstated in the New Hampshire society, he repeatedly has been refused reinstatement in the Hillsborough County Manchester Medical society.

Farther down the street, a man said: "I went into a lunch cart after work one night and about 11 p.m. Doc Sander came in and ordered a roast beef dinner. When I joshed him about eating so much so late, he said: 'This is the first meal I've had today.' I'll tell you, when you call Doc Sander, he'll never ask who you are or what you are—he'll come."

Science Reports First Glimmer Of Breakthrough in Cancer Front

By DELOS SMITH United Press Science Editor New York — (U.P.) — What could be the first glimmer of a breakthrough on the cancer front was reported to the world of science today.

Two distinguished scientists revealed they were controlling the growth of a particular kind of cancer in chick embryos inside eggs with "substantial success."

Drs. Alfred Taylor and Roger J. Williams of the University of Texas hedged their revelations with scientific care but suspected that successful cancer investigation "may take a course involving first the control of cancer in embryonated eggs, second its control in experimental animals, and lastly its control in human patients."

First Step If that proves to be so, the first step has now been taken, they reported in the proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences.

By combining a anti-cancer chemicals with an increased temperature, they stopped the growth of a mouse mammary tumor without interfering with the normal growth of the chick embryo enclosed in the same egg.

Their successful experiments were repeatable, which is an acid test. This experiment they detailed: 197 fertile eggs were inoculated with cancerous mouse tissue. On the 10th day of incubation, 140 eggs were inoculated with Tem, an anti-cancer chemical. At the same time the incubation temperature was raised from 98.93 degrees (F) to 104 degrees. The remaining 57 eggs were left alone in a 98.93 incubator.

Heat is a physical agent. On the 16th incubation day, all eggs were opened. In all the 57 "control" eggs except one, the embryos had been killed by the growing cancers, and the one survivor contained a large tumor. Of the 140 which had been treated with Tem and increased temperature, 86 not only had survived but had reached normal growth and only traces of a not typically appearing tumor were present in most of them.

Tem has been widely used against human cancers, with disappointing results. In only some it has slowed cancer growth—
