

Consolidation of Agencies in Timber Work Seen Helpful

Washington — (U.P.) — Richard E. McArdle, chief of the U. S. Forest Service, said yesterday there would be a "great many advantages" to consolidating the timber work of three government agencies.

McArdle made the statement in response to questions by two members of a joint Senate-House subcommittee investigating federal timber sales policies.

Reps. Charles R. Jonas (R-N.C.) and William E. Minshall (R-O.) said there may be duplication in timber work by the forest service, the Bureau of Land Management and the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Both inquired whether including all timber activities in one agency would provide the same services and save money.

McArdle said such a combination would have disadvantages, but "the advantages probably would outweigh them."

Jonas asked the agencies to supply charts showing how many of their employees now are doing timber work.

McArdle told the subcommittee that there is a "tremendous demand" for government-owned timber. He said 45 per cent of the nation's softwood saw timber, which is in greatest demand, is located in national forests.

Edward Woolzley, director of the land management bureau, told Rep. Clare E. Hoffman (R-Mich.) that Interior Secretary Douglas McKay "in my opinion is a real conservationist."

Hoffman said he received complaints from conservation organizations about gas and oil leases on wild life refuges.

Under Hoffman's questioning, Woolzley said McKay's new regulations on leasing will protect wild life in the refuges.

Mollet Strives for Paid Vacations

Paris — (U.P.) — Premier Guy Mollet was prepared today to stake the life of his young government on winning National Assembly approval of his bill to give French workers three-week paid vacations.

The Cabinet decided yesterday that Mollet could poise a vote of confidence if necessary during the debate on the issue.

The bill was approved yesterday by the Chamber's Labor Commission by 34 votes with all eight moderate deputies opposing. The vote indicated that the bill would have smooth sailing in the assembly.

But there are certain elements, notably the deputies of anti-tax crusader Pierre Poujade, who will not miss the chance to vote against the government. However, the opposition would not be strong enough to overthrow Mollet.

APPLEGATE-JACKSONVILLE Downpour Reactions Varied

By HELGA MITCHELL
Applegate-Jacksonville — There was a variety of reactions to the relentless downpour in this section of the woods.

Shouts of glee emanated from boys and girls as the news came over the air waves, "No school today!"

Curiosity seekers ventured out on roads strewn with debris, to see how high the river had risen and to watch the multitude of newly formed streams gurgling over the terrain.

Mrs. O. Buck was busily whirling her telephone dial informing all the members of the Little Applegate Knitting club that their meeting had been cancelled.

Men with shovels in hand were endeavoring to divert the many rivulets of water to prevent damaging soil erosion.

Two slides were reported in this area. One was on the east end of Bert Klute's property on Missouri Flat, and another slide was near the mouth of Thompson creek at Peite's garage. Rocks and gravel were seen in several grain fields, and much damage was done to the irrigation ditches.

I would like to correct a statement made in Feb. 15 column concerning the possibility of a vehicle bridge being built to replace the foot bridge washed out in December flood, just below Ruch on the Applegate river. Instead, work is continuing on construction of a new foot bridge, and the Dunlaps are repairing their own private low water vehicle bridge with the help of neighbors who are concerned.

Due to a misprint in the last column concerning Mrs. James Stephens of Sterling creek, the word "grandmother" should have read "granddaughter" instead.

A wounded lizard found refuge recently in the home of Mrs. Walter Rhodes of Upper Applegate. She nursed it back to health by placing a band-aid on its wound around the stomach. The only problem confronting Mrs. Rhodes is, "What do you feed a lizard?"

Mrs. C. Gerhardt of Applegate was recently absorbed in the art of fishing, intent on hooking a "big one." Simultaneously, a woodpecker was absorbed in pecking around an old limb, which was five inches in diameter. Suddenly, their individual preoccupations were shattered by a loud crash, as the woodpecker's limb fell to the ground. Mrs. Gerhardt looked up in time to see the woodpecker pecking around the trunk of the tree with a "what happened?" expression on his face.

Science Has Answer For Reason Behind Choice in Marriage

By DELOS SMITH
New York — (U.P.) — Science has provided a handy guide to help you determine why you married the woman (or man) you did marry—in case you've ever wondered. If you're not married, the guide can give you hints to the kind of woman (or man) you'll marry eventually.

According to the studies of three psychologists, certain personality traits can be grouped together as "assertive," and another set falls under the general head of "receptive." The psychological tendency is for "assertives" to marry "receptives" and vice versa.

An "assertive" personality has these traits: (1) "To work diligently to create something and/or to emulate others"; (2) "To influence and control the behavior of others"; (3) "To fight, injure, or kill others."

The "receptive" personality is marked by these traits: (1) "To accept or invite blame, criticism, or punishment"; (2) "To admire and praise others"; (3) "Fear, conscious or unconscious, of harm or misfortune arising from the hostility of others and/or social reaction to one's own behavior."

"Mate-selection," they reported previously, usually is based on "the greatest promise of providing him or her with maximum need—gratification"; and this "great promise" is provided by "complementary" rather than "similar personality" traits.

Hattie Carnegie Dies in New York

New York — (U.P.) — Hattie Carnegie, 70, an Austrian immigrant who helped put New York on the world fashion map, died Wednesday after a long illness.

She designed women's clothing ranging from exclusive creations for wealthy society matrons to the official WAC uniform and a modern nun's habit for a Carmelite order.

Miss Carnegie was born in Vienna but came to the United States with her parents while in her teens. She quit school at 11 to help out her poverty-stricken family.

She worked for a time as a messenger in Macy's department store and then got a job in a wholesale dress house. Although she had only one skirt and three blouses to wear to work she wore them so well that a dressmaker neighbor, Rose Roth, gave her a job and they later became partners.
