The Medical Roundup

by Walter Alvarez, Emeritus Consultant in Medicine, Mayo Clinic, Emeritus Professor of Medicine, Mayo Foundation

Chimpanzee, as well as children. Are Not All Alike... I was just reading in Science News Letter that Dr. H. W. Nissen of the great Yerkes laboratories for the study of the mentality of apes, reported recently that chimpanzees, all living under the same good environment, with strong individual characteristics...

I got to wondering if perhaps some baby chimps suffered early sexual traumas or were a bit rejected by their mother or were given an Oedipus complex! A while ago I was disturbed at the explanation given by an analyst for the well-known fact that commonly in a family of five children, four will be easy to handle and easy to teach, while one is a problem. The four will be good, happy and loving children at home and at school. The teachers will have no trouble with them, and they will grow up easily into fine, useful and well-liked citizens. But the other child, from birth, will be a problem. He will be rebellious and will refuse to conform to discipline either in the home or in school. He will be cruel and destructive and even cruel. At school, he may get into all sorts of malicious mischief. In spite of everything the parents can do, he may later get to running with a tough gang, and may end up as a criminal.

You can be glad for a dip in the cost of living coming soon. Watch for the price of snuff to go down as much as five cents a can which is certainly something not to be sneezed at in the family budget.

Thousands of families have puzzled over this sort of thing. Why should four children be so good and one so bad? Usually the grandmother seems to have a good answer. She says that the difficult child just inherited the curse that made one of her brothers or her sons a good-for-nothing, a wastrel, a hobo, or an alcoholic.

Believe All Alike The writer of the article I saw hooted at such an explanation: He evidently believed that all human beings are born alike, with the same amounts of ability and sanity and self-control and purpose in life. Here was his astounding explanation: He said that when one of a couple's four or five children is born, children had, the analyst took refuge, as some others do, in the crazy idea that the parents made a special environment for him within the family circle; and made a bad boy of him! Apply Only to Animals According to the writer of the article, the laws of heredity apply only to animals: They do not apply to man. Or, perhaps, they apply to a man's stature, build, color of hair and eyes, appearance of the face and great gifts of musical or scientific or other ability, but not to gifts of intelligence and good sense and sanity. Well, fortunately, all sensible and observant men and women in this world know that families are inherited in many curcles just as great gifts of intelligence are inherited in other families. Years ago the great Galton showed that in the preceding 100 years most of the genius in Great Britain had shown up in only a few families. Similarly, someone showed that a considerable percentage of the insane in mental hospi-

from the neck were torn in two the child could neither move a muscle nor feel anything with his hand. Then a surgeon operated and sewed the ends of the torn nerves together. Now, 15 months later, the child is able to move his hands and to feel things. (Released by The Register and Tribune Syndicate, 1956.)
